Christmas trees make things ‘merry and bright’

BY BARBARA MILLER
BEEM

Things might be a bit different this holiday season. But for collectors who “think Christmas” year round, regardless of what is happening in the rest of the world, it’s all about “Oh, Christmas Tree.” Be it live or artificial, green or pink (or something else), perched on a table or soaring to 12 feet or more, the Christmas tree remains at the heart of holiday celebrations, a gathering point for opening gifts, a place to pose for family pictures, and a centerpiece on which to hang souvenir ornaments from past times and travels. But it wasn’t always that way.

The first documented decorated tree was one displayed at a German tavern in 1607. “Of course, there might have been others that we don’t know about,” longtime collector Bob Brenner acknowledged. Years later, in 1842, this charming tradition found its way to America, thanks to Charles Minnegerode, a classics professor at the College of William and Mary. Feeling a bit homesick for Germany, Minnegerode decorated a tabletop tree with nuts, popcorn, and handcrafted paper ornaments, as well as candles. The children of his friend and colleague, Nathaniel Tucker, were enchanted, as were all who saw it in the town of Williamsburg, Va. Within a few years, neighboring families (and beyond) followed suit.

All the while, Queen Victoria’s consort, Prince Albert, kept up German traditions in England, celebrating the Yuletide with a decorated tabletop tree. Prints of the royal family observing Christmas were published in ladies’ magazines of the day, further popularizing the tradition, according to Brenner, a member of the collectors’ club “Golden Glow of Christmas,” and the author of multiple books on the subject.

To keep up with the public’s growing demand for ornaments, F.W. Woolworth and other American importers embarked on off-season European buying trips. Innovative German artisans fashioned artificial feather trees for display purposes, using a wooden dowel as a trunk, and then wiring goose feathers (often dyed green) to the “branches.” Store buyers capitalized on the marketing possibilities of these feather trees back in the States, thereby setting off a cottage industry. Speaking from personal experience, Brenner can attest to the fact that the process of creating such a tree is a tedious one.

Tastes change. In the late 1800s, diminutive feather trees seemed old-fashioned, and live, floor-to-ceiling trees with over-the-top decorations came into vogue. With the dawn of the new century, white Christmas trees, wrapped in cotton and adorned with white, clear, and silver ornaments, were considered stylish. To the horror of modern collectors, color was often stripped from older ornaments to achieve this look.

When electric tree lights were introduced, many feared they would not be as safe as open-flame candles. Further complicating the matter was a scarcity of electric sockets: A tree might be situated on a dining room table so the lights could be hard-wired onto the chandelier. All the while, decorated and illuminated trees became an integral part of the holiday. “By the end of the Great Depression, it is safe to say that almost every house in America had a Christmas tree,” Brenner stated.

Looking for something new in the 1930s, florists toyed with aluminum trees. But due to a shortage of metals, this avant-garde idea was put on hold until after World War II. These trees were for the “adventuresome,” Brenner said, which did not include his father, who declared one belonging to an aunt “the ugliest thing he had ever seen.” Notwithstanding, they caught on in some circles, complete with revolving color wheels.

Because “what goes around comes around,” white trees returned to favor in the late-1960s, with flocked Scotch and white pines (and balsams). As the Bicentennial

They may be cardboard; but Dresden ornaments shine

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

If you are looking for the perfect Christmas tree decoration this year, consider using Dresden ornaments. Dresden is the capital city of the German state of Saxony, and, historically, the town served as a cultural, educational, and political center of Germany for many years. Dresden has always been famous for its cultural and artistic splendor. Out of this historic setting came several artistic cottage industries, some of which captivated the entire world. The most prominent cottage industry to come out of Dresden and its surrounding areas are the beautiful Christmas decorations that were manufactured during the late-Victorian Era.

Beginning around 1870, artists in the Dresden area made simple but charming Christmas tree ornaments, using cardboard as the primary material. Cardboard is nearly the perfect material since it is inexpensive, is durable, and it possesses numerous possibilities for shaping. Dresden artists stretched cardboard's artistic possibilities to the max, creating every shape of Christmas transportation, animal, or angel ornaments one could think of, including zeppelins, boats, engines, sailboats, trucks, sleighs, balloons, fish, bears, eagles, peacocks, alligators, and lovely angels.

Each Dresden ornament was manufactured by dampening the cardboard to make it flexible. Stamping dies were then used to stamp the cardboard. Some ornaments were made from several pieces of stamped cardboard, which required cottage workers to dry and glue the pieces together.

As plain as these ornaments may sound to 21st century Christmas tree lovers, Dresden artists used glue, laminate work, and paint to make every cardboard ornament a delight. Each ornament was two to three inches in size and finished with a loop of string by which the ornament was hung on a Christmas tree branch.

Today, collectors eagerly search for and buy authentic Dresden cardboard Christmas ornaments. Because these ornaments are more than 100 years old and some are lost and damaged each year, Dresden cardboard ornaments sell for very high prices. Auction houses love to see a selection of Dresden ornaments go under the gavel because they are sure to bring pugilistic bidding, and when the gavel final drops, collectors believe Dresden cardboard ornaments must be worth their weight in gold.

The high price of these ornaments reflects their diminishing number. Despite the tens of thousands of these ornaments that must have been manufactured during their golden years, very few have survived, making a Dresden cardboard ornament, in good shape, a rare commodity. Collectors are able and willing to pay huge amounts for rare commodities, so expect to pay $500 to $1,000 or more for authentic Dresden cardboard Christmas ornaments.

Not all Dresden Christmas ornaments display easily since there are basically three types of Dresden ornaments—flat, double, and 3-dimensional. Flat ornaments are only embossed on the front side. Double ornaments have embossed detail on both sides.

Santa was able to fill his sleigh at Pook & Pook auction

DOWNINGTON, Pa. — Helping Santa and his elves is always a treat for the Staff of Pook & Pook. On Dec. 4 they teamed up with antique toy expert Noel Barrett for a fun Christmas antique toy auction. While there was no live audience in the gallery, that didn't stop bidders from actively pursuing their picks for the holiday season on the phones, via absentee in-house bidding, or on the two bidding platforms, Bidsquare and Live Auctioneers. The auction came in above the high estimated total with a 97 percent sell through rate.

The highlight of the sale was the holiday specific offerings including a wide variety of Christmas décor that started off the sale. Numerous German composition Belsnickel candy containers, German Father Christmas toys, Christmas trees, and ornaments were scattered throughout the first third of the auction. One stern faced German composition Belsnickel candy container almost doubled its high estimate bringing $2,318. A large German painted composition Santa Claus candy container measuring 18 ½ inches high which was originally purchased from the toy giant FAO Schwarz over a century ago, ho ho ho'd its way to $2,440, four times its high estimate. Waving past all expectations was a special Dresden American Flag Christmas ornament bringing $6,710. It was one of numerous Dresden decorations offered, all of which did ornamentally well.

A top Yuletide piece that crossed the block was a figural milk glass Santa Claus miniature oil lamp from the late 19th century. This unusual find came in at $2,318.

For buyers who didn't want the trouble of decorating their own tree this holiday season, several fully adorned feather trees were up for auction, the top examples bringing $3,416, $2,318, and $2,196. Dasher, Dancer, Prancer and all of the other reindeer were pulling a sleigh of great prices. Eight composition reindeer candy containers came in at $2,440, over four times the high estimate, and five large Dresden reindeer Christmas ornaments came in at $1,464, well over its high estimate also. A Hubley cast iron Santa with double reindeer pull toy dashed all the way to $1,464.

The iconic toy for under the Christmas tree has got to be a fire truck, and the Pook-Barrett team brought an incredible one to the auction block this time around. A mechanical model of a Knox fire truck from

Dresden Ornaments

And 3-dimensional Dresden ornaments have a maximum depth of about half an inch, giving the ornament a spatial impression that appears fully three-dimensional.

New Dresden-appearing ornaments are offered all the time since making a cardboard ornament is not difficult.

Some of the “New Dresden” ornaments are reportedly stamped from original Dresden plates. New Dresden ornaments are thinner and the foil process is not the same as on original ornaments. Most serious collectors believe the New Dresden ornaments may be called “Dresden,” but they are not authentic.

Novice collectors should purchase high priced Dresden ornaments from reputable dealers only.

with key-wind and nodding head action also realized within estimate at $3,416.

A real surprise in the sale was a Reason Manufacturing Company The Flying Witches game. This unique item had no comparable examples to be found so it was given a conservative estimate of $400-600. Still in its original box, this sole example sported two crepe paper and painted tin witches riding brooms revolving around a pole topped with a crescent moon. The floor bidding started at $550, but in less than two minutes had climbed to realize $3,660.

A group of miniature dollhouse accessories with exquisite detail came in at six times the high estimate at $3,172. One “shocker” according to Barrett was the Bliss paper lithograph alphabet chair that sung its way past what he believed to be a generous $200-300 estimate to $2,250. Some of the bidders apparently knew their ABC’s a bit better than expected.

A Marx tin lithograph Flash Gordon Signal Pistol, with the original box that was in excellent condition, shot its way to over the top estimate bringing $1,250.

The highlight of the aeronautical toy collection of the late Harry Nowak was a Kenton Flying Boat with “FOKKER” lettering on the wings and nickel-plated wing-tip pontoons. This exciting one-of-a-kind piece was bid on 23 times before it finished at $6,100. A second plane also blew the top off its estimate. A brightly colored red and teal Hubley cast iron DO-X seaplane came in at $3,500, over four times the high estimate.

The cast iron automotive toys kept coming down the chimney, including a number of excellent examples also from the Bill and Stevie Weart Collection, among them a group of colorful taxicabs and a nice example of a Hubley armored motorcycle. A highlight of the Weart Collection was a scarce Hubley cast iron Truk Mixer cement truck, with revolving drum, nickel plated tank, and an integral driver, which, even restored, still brought $4,148. A boxed Fred Thompson Smith Miller diecast Mack Auto Transport car carrier, no. C131/350, with six display vehicles in original boxes brought $2,000, which, according to Barrett, is $1,000 more than the one that sold last year, sans box. Those original boxes can really drive the price up.

Even more iron in the sale comes from a small group of mechanical banks highlighted by a Darktown Battery Base Ball Bank in its original box, which brought $3,904.

As popular as ever at the Pook-Barrett auctions are Baranger motions, colorful and cleverly electric animated window displays that were rented to small-town jewelry stores from the 1940s to ’60s. Five of them crossed the auction block on Dec. 4. The highlight, an incredible lovebird carnival display featuring a central Ferris wheel, a carousel, and a burger stand, all with lovebird couples and a placard that reads “You can be her Love Bird - Buy that Diamond Now,” realized $8,540.

The Corgi FC-150 Jeep out sold the real thing by large margin

BY ERIC BRYAN

The FC-150 Jeep was based on the standard CJ-5 Jeep, and had a production span from 1956 to 1965. But the FC (“Forward Control,”—that’s British English for “cab-over”) Jeep never attained the totemic status of the standard Jeep or Land Rover. In fact, FC Jeeps are rare sights on the roads these days.

British diecast maker Corgi’s Forward Control 150 Jeep had a successful run: The first model entered the range in the late 1950s and wasn’t withdrawn until the early ‘70s. Corgi also produced several variations of its basic FC-150 model.

The Willys FC-150

The advent of the FC-150 was announced in Willys News in November, 1956. The machine premiered at the New York Auto Show and went on sale that December. Constructed on a Jeep CJ-5 chassis, the FC-150 initially had a 45 horsepower F4-134 Hurricane engine (also used in the CJ-5). The forward control arrangement meant most engine access was accomplished through the cab: a small hatch opened for quick oil checks, a larger cover could be removed in order to reach the spark plugs, and a two-section skirt came away quickly if the starter or generator needed attention.

In July 1958 Willys fitted the vehicle with heavier 3000 pound capacity axles. This modification included an upgraded suspension system, adding to the new versions’ stability on turns, grades and rough ground.

The FC-150 could be had in a huge array of variations for a multitude of purposes. Beyond the basic pick-up, these included a stake truck, a wrecker, a mini tractor-trailer (which got at least as far as a concept model), a fire truck and a dump truck. The vehicle’s four-wheel drive capability, compactness, maneuverability and forward-control visibility also made it popular as a parking lot snowplow.

Manufacture of the FC series (first by Willys, then by Kaiser-Jeep) continued until the FC program was scrapped in 1965. The reason why the original vehicles are scarce today is simply that the forward control design didn’t catch on in the U.S., resulting in a relatively low total FC production number of approximately 30,000 units (according to Jim Allen’s Illustrated Buyer’s Guide: Jeep). Versions of FC models were also made in Spain, and in India up until recent times.

Corgi Forward Control Jeep FC-150

Released as No. 409 in 1959, this model was issued in sky blue which was offset nicely by a distinctive red grille with cast JEEP lettering, silver painted headlights and front bumper. The cab was fitted with window inserts and had no interior. The model had spun wheel hubs, no suspension and a metal tow hook.

An excellent piece of detailing on this Corgi was the spare wheel wedged into specially-cast recesses on the right side of the bed. The upper recess which accommodated the wheel created an arch in the ledge in the bed, adding further realism to the model. Though without other working features, the doors and tailgate were clearly delineated in the casting. For good to excellent examples of the No. 409 with boxes, recent auction results show a range of $35-75. Mint models with boxes have fetched $100.

Corgi Hydraulic Tower Wagon

In 1961 Corgi introduced its Gift Set 14, Hydraulic Tower Wagon with Single Lamp Standard and Electrician.

Electrician. The vehicle was the FC-150 with a bed-mounted boom lift which raised and rotated, with a yellow plastic cradle attached to the end. As the boom raised and lowered, the cradle stayed level to the ground via a dual boom arrangement. The electrician figure who rode in the cradle was posed with arms overhead to emulate the changing of a lamp in the included freestanding lamp standard.

The model was issued in red with a white grille. Like the No. 409 this variation also had window inserts, spun hubs and no interior, but lacked the towing hook. Some rare sets included a double instead of a single lamp standard. (The New Great Book of Corgi notes that the Lamp Standard was from the 606 Kit Set series.)

For 1965 Corgi brought out an updated version of the model on its own as Hydraulic Tower Wagon on Forward Control Jeep FC-150, No. 478. This time issued in red with a silver grille or metallic green with a red grille, Corgi added an interior and spring suspension to this variation. (Anyone who grew up with 1960s Corgi Toys will attest to how much play value and realism the suspension and realistic treaded rubber tires added.)

The Corgi Gift Set 14, mint and complete, has realized $180 at auction. A set in the same condition but with the rare double lamp standard could fetch a bit more. For the No. 478, the good to mint range is $75-150.

Corgi FC-150 Jeep with Hood
Also for 1965 was No. 470, the Forward Control Jeep FC-150 With Detachable Hood. An upgraded version of the No. 409 with spring suspension and interior, this model had a gray plastic canopy which fastened to the bed. Issued with a mustard, blue or light blue body it had red or yellow interior and a red grille. The all-important towing hook was included, but was changed to the plastic type.

The later versions had cast wheel hubs and were sold in window boxes. A treat here was the art on the reverse of the window boxes. It portrayed an apparently South or Central American jungle scene, with the Jeep rolling past a burro or donkey carrying a sombrero-clad rider, his hand raised in greeting. All of this was depicted under an orange sky, with sunbeams slanting onto the shadowy jungle greenery. This FC-150 model survived in the Corgi range until 1972.

Values for the No. 470 are similar to those of its earlier incarnation as the No. 409, with good to excellent plus packaging examples in the $35-75 range, and minty models going for $90-100.

Corgi Conveyor on FC 150 Jeep
Nineteen sixty-five was definitely the year of the FC-150 for Corgi, as yet another variation of the trusty Jeep entered the range at this time. Issued as No. 64, this was the Working Conveyor on Forward Control Jeep FC-150. For this model, Corgi pushed the play value through the roof. It had a complete conveyor belt system attached to a frame which was mounted to the vehicle's bed. The conveyor had separate front and rear booms which could be independently raised into different positions via hydro-sleeves.

The bottom end of the boom system featured a loading ramp which acted as a feeder for the conveyor belt. The underside of the ramp had a hazard stripes label affixed which was visible when the ramp was folded forward.
You could operate the rubber conveyor belts by turning a crank on the right side of the booms. The crank attached to the bottom roller of the upper boom, and on the left side of the booms the end of it terminated in a gear system which cleverly also gave drive power to the lower conveyor belt. Corgi mounted this gear system in a clear plastic housing so that you could see how the mechanics worked as you turned the crank. (Corgi also mounted this conveyor system on a specialized trailer to be towed by its Ford 5000 Super Major Tractor. This pair was introduced in 1966 as GS47, with a characteristically artwork-rich inner display plinth.)

As if this wasn't enough, this feature-rich model also came with a packet of plastic sacks and a worker figure to load them onto the conveyor. The icing on the cake was the charming box art on the inner display plinth depicting a British farm cottage in a sunny setting. This FC-150 was made with a red body and yellow-orange grille and conveyor booms. Auction results for good, excellent and mint samples of this detailed model are roughly $75-100, $100-150 and $150-200, respectively.

Heaps of Jeeps
In terms of sales of the original FC Jeeps, the FC-150 is another case where the Corgi model outperformed the real machine by a huge margin: The combined number of units sold of the 409, GS14, 478, 470 and 64 from 1959-72 was well over two million. With the models much less scarce than the actual FC-150, maybe it's time for diecast collectors to reconsider this interesting machine. Surely the FC-150 should hold wide appeal for 4x4 enthusiasts!

Setting sail with nautical collectibles can be educational

BY DEBORAH THREADGILL

Masted ships that once dotted the landscape sailing the high seas from one corner of the globe to another are all but a distant memory. But savvy history buffs and collectors alike have recognized the value in preserving the rich legacy and stories these ships and their crew members left behind and the number of antique maritime collectors here and abroad is growing. While there are many sub-categories in this area of collectibles, I'm just going to touch upon three here.

Ephemera:
Whether the vessel was carrying goods from one continent to another or had passengers on their way to a new life in a new country, a written record, called a manifest, documented said goods or people.

Cargo inventories listing tea are of particular interest to collectors. Tea came to America in 1650, courtesy of Peter Stuyvesant, who carried the tea from Europe to sell in the Dutch colony of New Amsterdam (a.k.a. New York). These colonists loved their tea and it is reported that those tea loving New Yorkers drank more tea than the whole of England at that time. The first American millionaires were merchants who brought tea to the buying public with tea being a major source of their wealth.

Passenger manifests are also eagerly sought after. They are an invaluable resource in any genealogist's toolbox. It is yet another way for families to piece together their ancestral puzzle and explore familial roots and for historians to record the migration into America. While these manifests don't often come up at auction or have limited availability in the marketplace, when they do show up they spark the interest of many including libraries, museums, historians and companies specializing in ancestral tracing. Ships logs, a first-hand daily record of the operation and navigation of the vessel, as well as entries for accidents, illness and anything else the log keeper felt important, are of interest to many maritime collectors as well as climate scientists. Climate scientists? Yes. Ships logs contain a veritable treasure trove of weather data that is key to today's climate research. A historical look at water, air temperature, air pressure, sea ice, wind, etc., recorded hundreds of years ago offers invaluable insight and tools to predict current and future climate models. Hundreds of volunteers across the country are involved in projects like the Southern Weather Discovery, launched in 2018, and the Old Weather Project, meticulously transcribing the logs. Though these logs do come up for auction or sale from time to time collectors can expect to pay several hundred if not several thousand dollars for the rights to own one.

Artwork:
To while away the idle hours when crewmen were not on watch, cleaning or maintaining the ship, sailors would read, mend clothes, sing or carve. Scrimshaw, an art form developed by American whalers, used whale teeth or baleen as the base material in which to carve presents for family — the most popular being ones with etching along the sides or ones cut into a sort of jagged wheel shape that could be used as pastry crimps. While most people think of scrimshaw as whale tooth carvings, the term also covers pieces crafted out of sea shells, tortoise shell or coconuts. Original and authentic carved whale teeth command high dollars.

Wool pictures, a.k.a. "woolies" are embroidered ship portraits, usually of the sailor's own vessel, sewn primarily by 19th century British sailors (although some American-made ones do exist) with the earliest existing ones dating back to 1830. Highly collectible both in the U.K. and U.S. these prized pieces command thousands of dollars. Sailors took to creating these one-of-a-kind pieces in their spare time by using items readily avail-

Above: A circa 1875 sailor-made English woolie crafted of wool and metallic threads from the estate of Heidi Bingham Scott, this artistic jewel sold for $9,500 at an April 28, 2020, auction conducted by Freeman's, Philadelphia, PA. With 28 bids it had a pre-sale estimate of $2,000 to $3,000. Info and image courtesy of LiveAuctioneers.com able on-board — sail canvas, duck cloth, fabric from trouser legs, cotton or linen formed the base for the stitches. To begin, the sailor drew a rough outline sketch of the ship onto the base fabric using a pencil or piece of charcoal and then began to fill the outline in with embroidery stitches using brightly colored wool thread in shades of white, blue, red, brown and greens. Sewing was nothing new to a sailor as they often made their own clothes, mended worn clothing or made repairs to the ship's sails. These creations ran the gamut from plain and rather simple to the highly adorned with bits of sea shells, bone, metal, glass, sequins and trapunto stitching. As these woolies were made as gifts, to reflect a sailor's pride in their ship, or as a way to record the journey, most are unsigned.

Folk art style woolies are a collector favorite and examples sell quickly—the charm of the untrained artist irresistible. Woolies that display intricate stitching details and the use of silk thread rather than wool are prized by fans.
Only a few thousand woolies are known to exist and an American collector, Donald Berezoski, one of the leading experts on naval folk art, reportedly has the largest collection of woolies in private hands—42. He graciously lent his collection to the Tawes Museum of the Crisfield Heritage Foundation so that others may enjoy the artisanship of long-ago

Navigation

From signal lamps to ship lanterns, Chel-sea clocks, barometers, compasses and sextons, and everything in between, these smaller pieces of maritime history delight many a collector. Depending on rarity, condition, provenance and intended use these assorted items run the gamut from under $50 to several hundred and oftentimes into the thousands.

These masted ships of long ago along with their crew members were the lifeblood to a growing America and her economy bringing customers to manufacturers, transporting immigrants to a new country filled with opportunity and a promise of a brighter tomorrow, transporting building materials to meet the needs of expanding colonies and delighting colonists with culinary treasures from far away.

Please report late delivery

AntiqueWeek strives to provide customers with the best delivery possible. Occasionally, areas of the country do not receive timely delivery of the paper. The goal of AntiqueWeek's late delivery staff is to work with the USPS to get your paper to you – on time, every time. If your paper is not delivered on or before the issue date, please let us know.

These areas experienced multiple reports of late deliveries during the week of 11/24/20: Illinois, Pennsylvania, Missouri & Indiana.

These states reported single reports of late delivery for the same week: Virginia & New Jersey.

Due to the high volume of calls we receive on a weekly basis, we are publishing some phone numbers for the USPS. We encourage you to call them and let them know how their recent changes have impacted your delivery. Debra Benn: (317) 870-8244, Tracey Murphy: (317) 870-8238, Deborah Samuels: (317) 870-8245, Lynn Seymour: (317) 870-8263

Our staff members will continue to address the late delivery reports we receive. We are constantly striving to rectify the late delivery problem. Please call our customer care center at (800) 876-5133 or email subscriptions@antiqueweek.com to report late delivery. Continue to report delivery issues if problems are not fixed after the first call so staff members can continue to report these difficulties to the USPS.

In order to ensure everyone can see the paper on time, AntiqueWeek uploads each issue every Saturday morning to its website. The online issue is free to subscribers and totally keyword searchable. Visit www.antiqueweek.com.

Above: Simple, handmade ornaments, like other trends, come and go.

Above: A shortage of electrical outlets no doubt led to the decision to display this Christmas tree in the middle of the dining room table, where it could be connected to the chandelier.

Christmas Tree

drew near, “natural” trees were once again in favor, including “bushy” artificial trees. In an effort to be kinder to the environment, many families chose artificial trees (made from petroleum products, which are not renewable) instead of chopping down a live tree (which, as it happened, is renewable). Surprisingly, surviving artificial trees from this era, those not consigned to a landfill, are now “highly collectible,” selling for anywhere from $60 to $200. “You collect what you remember,” Brenner concluded.

Acknowledging that, John Hanssen stated, “I’m kind of the opposite.” His collection began when he asked relatives if he could have whatever they no longer wanted. To his delight, he found himself the custodian of family ornaments from the 1920s and ’30s. He moved on to buying box lots for $5. Also a member of “Golden Glow of Christmas,” the Nebraskan now focuses on lighting but is particularly intrigued with old photographs that illustrate Christmases past.

After years of studying these images, as well as talking to members of his family, Hanssen has learned a lot. Older relatives remember seeing trees primarily at school and church. Memories from the Great Depression include the story of how family members once decorated tumbleweed because they could not afford a tree. Some years, the decorated tree was kept outdoors. “Maybe their house was too small, or maybe they thought the tree was messy,” he guessed.

Right: Bushy or spindly, tall or tabletop, live or artificial: The Christmas tree is the centerpiece of many holiday celebrations. .(courtesy of Bob Brenner)

With unsheared trees, there were plenty of empty spaces between branches. Early trees bore cookies and raisins (still on the stem). On the downside, children had to wait until the tree was disassembled on January 6 to enjoy the treats. Other times, gifts (perhaps a doll, a necktie, or a handkerchief) might be placed on the tree.

In a perfect world, John Hanssen would celebrate with 60 or 70 decorated trees. That would be in addition to the display cases and shelves that fill the downstairs level of his home, what his family refers to as “the museum.” This year, however, Hanssen plans to rein in his enthusiasm with “maybe 10 trees upstairs.”

So does Christmas come but once a year? Not for true believers. These days, as Hanssen noted, “Whenever I need a Christmas ‘fix,’ I just go downstairs.” “O Tannenbaum,” indeed!

Above: Clearly, this little guy was on Santa’s “nice” list, from the looks of things. Check out the over-the-top tree decorations.

Below: “Glistening pom-pom aluminum trees” from the early 1970s. Trees like this appealed to a limited audience at the time, but collectors of all things mid-century have different ideas. .(courtesy of Bob Brenner)

Above: Christmas trees were originally a German tradition. But less than 100 years after the first one was decorated in Williamsburg, most every household in America had adopted the tradition.
