For 50 years Corelle has been what's used for dinner

BY BARBARA MILLER BEEM

It's the most recognized brand of dinnerware in the world. Gracing tables in approximately 40 countries and estimated to be in use in nearly half of all American households, it's affordable, adaptable, and attractive; easy to use, easy to clean, and easy to store. And it's durable. Even as today's consumers continue to discover its positive attributes, many original owners still use the pieces they purchased years ago. Little wonder that more than 50 years after its introduction to the market, collectors embrace the joy of Corelle.

The rollout was brilliant, no doubt better than anticipated: "Meet the new face of Corelle dinnerware by Corning." The public responded with enthusiasm, so much so that the Corning Glass Factory in Corning, N.Y., struggled to keep up with demand. Introduced in 1970, four-piece place settings (a plate, a bowl, and a coffee cup and saucer) were offered in four patterns: "Winter Frost White," "Butterfly Gold," "Snowflake Blue," and "Spring Blossom Green."

Made of "Vitrelle," a "space age" product by which three layers of two kinds of glass were laminated together (not unlike plywood), Corelle was practical for everyday use. According to early brochures, Corning promised to replace, free of charge, any piece that broke, chipped, crazed, or stained. "Winter Frost White" was accompanied by the "Corning Promise" not to discolor. Decorations were guaranteed not to wear off in the dishwasher. Thin and taking up little storage space, Corelle was offered at an attractive price point, one that competed with dinnerware generally considered to be inferior.

Reinforcing consumer confidence was the fact that the Corning name was already established, first with Pyrex and then with Corning Ware. With these extra lines available, Corning produced complimentary pieces for cooking and serving to use with Corelle.

Bottom line: Ask anyone of a certain age, and you're likely to hear a Corelle story. Woodstock resident Kathy chose Corelle when she set up housekeeping in the early 1970s. To this day, it's still her everyday dinnerware of choice. Baltimorean Val bought the "green flower" Corelle when she married, but then decided to switch to Johnson Brothers dishes for everyday. "Big mistake," she recalled. "They got chipped and the glaze cracked in my four cups, so I went back to Corelle." These days, she cherishes a later pattern, one that is "white with a navy blue double ring," although her husband still prefers eating off "plain white."

And then there's Kathleen Kallen, who hosts a Corelle collector's website (www.vintagecorelle.com) as well as a Facebook group of likeminded collectors (www.facebook.com/groups/vintagecorelle). Kallen has fond memories of "Spring Blossom Green," the pattern of her grandmother, an immigrant from the Netherlands. "She didn't have a lot of resources," Kallen noted, and this everyday dinnerware was "very dear to her. I wish I had her original pieces."

Since that was not possible, the Michigan woman (who spends her winters in Florida) began seeing Corelle in thrift stores several years ago. Knowing that Pyrex already had a following and was "very collectable," she considered Corelle and thought, "We're on the cusp of something." She started picking up pieces that appealed to her.

Her instincts were correct. A dish that she might have picked up for 59 cents two years ago is now $5, probably more if purchased online. As a professional web designer, she went to work, hoping to connect like-minded collectors. Whereas many collectors focus on only one pattern ("and interestingly, it's the pattern their grandmother or mother had while they were growing up"), others, including Kallen, have different strategies. "My goal is to collect a place setting from different patterns," a project she hopes will result in a "Frankenset."

Because collecting Corelle is still comparatively new, there are few rules, but members of Kallen's Facebook group tend to zero in on three of the original patterns ("Butterfly

Use vintage boxes to store all the things delivered to your door

If you're like me, you're no doubt finding yourself lost in a sea of cardboard boxes these days, ones that are really hard to get rid of, because, well, you just never know. At the same time, advertisements from the big box stores are urging us to stock up on -- what else? -- big boxes. I suppose they figure we need their oversized plastic tubs with sealable lids for all the things being delivered in those cardboard boxes. Maybe it's time to think about using vintage boxes.

I'm not aware of a club for vintage box collectors (although I'd love to hear from members if there is one), but I do know that a lot of people are intrigued with boxes. Made of a variety of materials, they can be ornate or plain, tiny or not-so-small, meant to hold one specific thing or a catch-all. I once had reason to research what are now commonly called "Bible boxes," which, as it turns out, is something of a misnomer. As it happens, long before members of the "middling class" owned family Bibles, joiners (I suppose we would call them "cabinet makers" these days) crafted lidded wooden containers for their well-heeled customers. Intended to hold personal belongings, they were listed as pieces of furniture on household inventories and were simply referred to as "boxes." When, where, and why they were given a romantic name is unclear, but today, it's a rare show exhibiting fine antiques that does not have at least one "Bible box" for sale. But I digress.

I'm not a box collector. But I do have what could best be described as a box accumulation. Not only are they attractive and interesting, but my vintage boxes are excellent for holding down clutter and helping to eliminate mad searches for little odds and ends. What could be better than taking a vintage item and repurposing it, sometimes the same way for which it was originally intended, but other times in conjunction with new things? Although some of my favorite boxes are wooden, metal and ones made of paper have their charm as well. Perhaps a short inventory of my accumulation might provide a bit of inspiration.

Particularly handsome is the collar box that was once used by my Grandfather. It's empty now, but I'm beginning to think it might be the perfect place for my unsightly tangle of charging cords. Next to it rests an old ballot box, once used for elections at a union hall. It, too, sits idly by.

But on another shelf is a sampling of the wares of the now-defunct L. F. Grammes & Sons, including some attractive pyrographic boxes made in my Dad's hometown of Allentown, Pa. These boxes are real workhorses, as they hold various postcard collections. And I can't forget the hinged box topped with a needlepointed robin. I stitched it for my Mom 50 years ago, so I guess

Iconic attraction Roadside America attracts bidders wanting memories

BY ERIC C. RODENBERG

SHARTLESVILLE, Pa. – When 10-year-old Laurence Gieringer and his brother, Paul, reached the summit of Mt. Penn, near Reading, Laurence, seeing the almost toy-like panorama, turned to his brother and said, wouldn't it be neat if we could build a model of the city.

This was in the early 20th century. True to his calling, Laurence began carving and building. His brother went into the priesthood.

Gieringer originally worked with discarded Depression-era fruit crates, which were higher quality than today. He also mixed his own paint, built his own molds and began animating his creations with tiny electric motors.

He first created an idyllic version of early 1700s American rural life and continued to build until he died in 1963 at the age of 69 years. By one account, he had used 17,700 board feet of lumber, 4,000 pounds of sheet iron, 2,250 feet of railroad and trolley tracks, and five electric pumps handling 6,000 gallons of water per hour. His wife, Dora, made 10,000 miniature trees.

Right: One of the plaques sold with a scaled miniature railroad trestle, maintains that the bridge was structurally sound enough for "several real men" to stand on. It sold for $5,100.

In 1954, they opened Roadside America in Shartlesville, north of Reading. The business flourished. Their annual attendance was more than 100,000, with tour buses from throughout the United States pulling into their expansive parking lot.

Meanwhile, Gieringer kept building. He expanded by animating his village, fascinating visitors as they pushed a button and a steam roller began moving, or a choir started singing, a church bell ringing, locomotives whistling.

For 50 years, people stopped at Roadside America. However, the 21st century travel-rocks; another, an Edgeworth tobacco tin, a great piece of advertising that's perfect for postage stamps.

I have some sturdy paper boxes that come in handy as well. And we can't forget cigar boxes, long appreciated for holding pencils and crayons, Bakelite bangle bracelets and hair accessories, as well as nuts and bolts, nails and screws. No need to hide them away, as their strong graphics make a decorative statement.

Boxes look best when displayed as a group. Try multi-purposing them on bookshelves, where they can also serve as bookends. Maybe this is the time to place “on permanent loan” a vintage box in the safekeeping of a young person; it's never too soon to engender a love for orderliness and old things. But in the end, though, don't forget the most important things that boxes hold: memories.

er was not as big of a fan of roadside attractions and then the Covid-19 pandemic put the final nail in the business' coffin.

The owners of Roadside America, all part of Gieringer's family, did all they could to keep the collection together. They offered the entire entertainment site for sale, but there were no serious takers.

The family contacted Auctioneer Bill Howze from the Renaissance Auction Group in Reading, who conducted an online only sale which concluded Jan. 23.

“I had never been into the business until the family contacted me,” Howze said. “When I walked in there, I said to myself, ‘so this is what they've all been talking about. Little did I know that Laurence Gieringer was one of the top five model builders of the 20th Century. As a two-dimensional artist I'd have to say he's good. But as a three-dimensional artist he is the top of the line.”

And, the prices realized at auction support Howze's claims. A miniature scale model of a train trestle linking two canyons walls sold for $5,100; a reproduction of the Fairfield train station brought $3,550; and miniature Fairfield Dutch Barn House, sold for $2,025.

All quoted prices are hammer prices, not including an 18 percent buyer's premium.

“It was an auctioneer's dream,” Howze says. “You know, the auctioneer dream auction is when the relatives show up and eight of them want to bid on granny's lamp. But here we had 1,200 registered bidders show up from the same family.

“It was kind of weird really. I'd have people call from all corners of the country and they all said the same thing: ‘I just want a piece of it.’ One guy just wanted the button that operated one of the displays – just that one button. I told him I've got a box full of buttons, I can't guarantee which one is the one you want.”

The winning bidders on the larger pieces also got a plaque pointing out specific history and other information on the “original” site the model depicts. One plaque noted that “The Trestle Bridge linking the two canyon walls was built sufficiently strong to not only handle the weight of the two miniature railways crossing it, but also the weight of several real men.”

Seven hundred lots comprised the city and countryside that Gieringer created more than 50 years ago are precise, detailed and still extremely sturdy, according to Howze. When Gieringer put up the sign about the Trestle Bridge, he was serious.

“This was a great auction to be part of,” Howze said. “I believe this is all the Gieringer work there is. He had done some on consignment, but the family later bought all those back and they were in the auction.

“There's no doubt in my mind that Laurence Gieringer models will only spiral up in value. I think he will be noticed for what he did, for the next 20, 50, maybe even 100 years.”

Howze and The Renaissance Group will be auctioning off the “rolling stock” that was Roadside America, including numerous trains, vintage promo cars from automotive dealers, Britains cast figures and more.

Paintings painted a pretty picture at Ripley Auctions

INDIANAPOLIS — Original oil on canvas paintings by Lois Dodd (American, b. 1927), Mercedes Carles Matter (American, 1913-2001) and Gillian Ayres (UK, 1930-2018) sold for a combined $150,000, and a beautiful black ebony Bosendorfer grand piano played a sweet tune for $53,125 in a live and online auction held Jan. 16 by Ripley Auctions, based in Indianapolis.

The Estate Art & Antiques auction was headlined by items from the estate of the legendary British conductor and composer Raymond Leppard (1927-2019), a Grammy-winning recording artist and scholarly revivalist of 16th and 17th century baroque operas. Also offered were fine items pulled from prominent estates and collections in the Indianapolis area – 325 lots in all.

In addition to the Raymond Leppard items, the auction catalog was packed with Italian and American studio glass, musical instruments, modern paintings, sculptures and decorative accessories. Around 20 people attended the auction in person, in the Ripley Auctions gallery, while hundreds of others bid online via LiveAuctioneers.com, Invaluable.com and Auctionzip.

Andrea Hastings, Ripley Auctions' Vice President and Head of Inventory, said, "Recently we've achieved auction record prices for some of New York's post-modern female artists who I'm happy to see are getting due recognition." She was referring to the paintings by Dodd and Matter, whose paintings were the auction's two top earners. The Gillian Ayres work was the third top lot.

The large, 66 inch by 48 inch painting by Lois Dodd was untitled (Can't See the End Table for the Trees) and depicts just that: an end table amongst a group of trees. It had a Fischbach, N.Y. gallery label verso and sold for a robust $71,875. Dodd is primarily a painter of New England landscapes, never people. She's fascinated by shapes. Much of her work has geometric emphasis.

The colorful, untitled still life by Mercedes Carles Matter was painted in 1962 and acquired directly from the artist by the consignor, a private collector in Indianapolis. The 43 inch by 49 ½ inch work (image area, less frame) climbed to $65,624. Matter is best known as a painter of abstract stilllifes. She lived in East Hampton, N.Y., and founded the Studio School in 1964.

The equally colorful Angel Heart, painted in 1992 and signed by Gillian Ayres, measured 48 inches by 36 inches (image area, less frame) and knocked down for $12,500. Ayres was one of the most significant abstract painters to emerge in London during the postwar period. She was a disciple and vanguard of the taschist style, a distinct, non-geometric abstract style.

a black ebony finish and an upholstered Standard Kimball black bench. It wasn't available for gallery viewing and shipped directly from the residence of the consignor to the buyer. Bosendorfer is one of the oldest fine piano makers. It was founded in 1828 in Austria by Ignaz Bosendorfer.

Most of the lots in the auction were from the estate of Raymond Leppard, who notably served as the music conductor for the Indianapolis Sympho-

Event Finder is only for advertised events. Auctioneers and show managers who want to be listed in our free calendar listings may continue to do so. Those free listings will be contained in the Auction or Show calendar sections.

While we have taken great care in compiling the information shown here, we strongly urge you to call the auctioneer or show manager listed for the event in case of cancellations or postponements. We also encourage auctioneers and show managers to contact us with any changes to their schedule. AntiqueWeek is not responsible for errors or omissions.

Lincoln born in a log cabin, but his family was not poor

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Presidents' Day is Monday, Feb. 15 and it celebrates all U.S. presidents, past and present. The day was originally celebrated as President George Washington's birthday, but in 1971, in order to create more three-day weekends, the Uniform

Monday Holiday Act passed, creating just one day in February to celebrate all presidents, including a provision to combine the celebration of Washington's birthday with that of Abraham Lincoln, which fell on Feb. 12. Many Americans supported joining the two days as a way of giving equal recognition to America's two most famous presidents.

The earliest known celebration of Lincoln's birthday occurred in Buffalo, N.Y., in 1873 when Julius Francis, a Buffalo druggist, made it his lifelong mission to honor his idol, President Lincoln.

The U.S. mint, to honor Lincoln, released four new Lincoln pennies to celebrate his bicentennial birthday. While the standard portrait of Lincoln's head remained on the front, each of these commemorative coins have new engravings on their reverse sides, showing stages in Lincoln's life. And while all four are found in nearly all Lincoln collections, one of the coins is found in collections that are limited to Lincoln's log cabin upbringing. This coin shows a log cabin that is representative of the cabin Lincoln was born in. And, collectors, who appreciate and collect Lincoln's Log Cabin collectibles, value this coin along with all things related to Lincoln and log cabins.

School children across America, for nearly 160 years, have learned that Lincoln was born in a log cabin.

According to the National Park Service, Lincoln was, "Born in a one-room log cabin on his father's Sinking Spring Farm on Sunday, February 12, 1809, Abraham Lincoln's early years on the Kentucky frontier helped to shape his character and prepare the boy who would grow up to become the 16th President of the United States to lead the nation through the tragic and turbulent times of the Civil War. His legacy of liberty and equality remains relevant today and continues to impact people around the world."

The original log cabin is long gone, but a "symbolic birth cabin is enshrined within a Neo-Classical Memorial Building on the traditional site of the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln." This symbolic log cabin has been the inspiration for most of the Lincoln log cabins collected today. Included among collectibles obtained in the gift shop of the park are postcards featuring the log cabin. Some of the most collectible of these date to the 1930s and '40s and are highly prized today. One of the most sought-after log cabin collectibles is the log cabin bank that was sold in the Lincoln Birthplace Memorial's gift shop in the 1940s. This inexpensive log cabin bank has started many school age children dreaming about becoming president. Their shared motto seems to have been, "if Abe could do it, coming from this humble origin, I can do it too." Sadly, according to David Streitfeld, Lincoln's humble birth is a myth.

Streitfeld (Razing the Log Cabin Myth, 1984) said, "The 'log cabin myth,' has been around almost as long as presidents have, and the myth still persists today. This homespun bit of American folklore was first used as a political tool for the reelection of President William Henry Harrison. The Baltimore Republican newspaper wrote of Harrison, 'Give him a barrel of hard cider and settle a pension of 2,000 a year on him and he will sit the remainder of his days in his log cabin.'"

Streitfeld called Lincoln, "the greatest contributor to the log cabin myth." While Lincoln was actually born in a log cabin, Thomas Lincoln, at the time of his son's birth, owned two farms totally 1,200 acres and lots of livestock and horses. "Thomas Lincoln's wealth made him nearly the richest man in the area."

Later, in 1860 after being elected president, Lincoln summed up his early life by stating, "all can be condensed into a single sentence and that sentence you will find in Gray's Elegy - 'the short and simple annals of the poor.'" Lincoln believed the American public wanted to hear the myth of his birth more than the reality.

Recently, two searches on eBay for "Abraham Lincoln's Log Cabins" revealed 145 possible collectibles on one search and 161 possible collectibles on a second search, proving that the myth of the humble birth of Abraham Lincoln is still believed and, based on collectible cabins, is ever growing.

This makes sense when you consider that Shinbone Star newspaper owner and editor said, "This is America! 'When the legend becomes fact, print the legend.'" Fact, myth, or legend, the story of Lincoln's birth has grown larger than his stove top hat. And collectors continue to add to the legend each year.

Please report late delivery

AntiqueWeek strives to provide customers with the best delivery possible. Occasionally, areas of the country do not receive timely delivery of the paper. The goal of AntiqueWeek's late delivery staff is to work with the USPS to get your paper to you – on time, every time. If your paper is not delivered on or before the issue date, please let us know.

These areas experienced multiple reports of late deliveries during the week of 01/05/21: New York, Virginia, Illinois, Georgia, Indiana, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Iowa, Florida, Michigan, Wisconsin, South Carolina, Ohio.

These states reported single reports of late delivery for the same week: Texas, North Carolina, Alabama, Delaware, Connecticut, Tennessee, Kentucky, West Virginia, Colorado, Missouri, & District of Columbia.

Due to the high volume of calls we receive on a weekly basis, we are publishing some phone numbers for the USPS. We encourage you to call them and let them know how their recent changes have impacted your delivery.
Debra Benn: (317) 870-8244, Tracey Murphy: (317) 870-8238, Deborah Samuels: (317) 870-8245, Lynn Seymour: (317) 870-8263

Our staff members will continue to address the late delivery reports we receive. We are constantly striving to rectify the late delivery problem. Please call our customer care center at (800) 876-5133 or email subscriptions@antiqueweek.com to report late delivery. Continue to report delivery issues if problems are not fixed after the first call so staff members can continue to report these difficulties to the USPS.

In order to ensure everyone can see the paper on time, AntiqueWeek uploads each issue every Saturday morning to its website. The online issue is free to subscribers and totally keyword searchable. Visit www.antiqueweek.com.

Corelle

Blue,” “Snowflake Blue,” and “Spring Blossom Green”), as well as “Old Town Blue,” “April,” “Indian Summer,” “Wildflower,” and “Meadow.” Additionally, “there is a lot of interest in the Christmas patterns.” She explained, “Vintage pieces aren’t so rare that you become frustrated,” adding that limited editions are said to be found in shops in and around Corning.

To be certain, over the years, Corelle has evolved. From the beginning, the first cups offered in the line were closed-handled and made of a ceramic material (not Vitrelle, as were other pieces in the original place settings). But beginning in late-1972 and lasting through 1982, microwavable hook-handled cups (easily stacked and “surprisingly cool,” in Kallen’s opinion) were introduced. It should be noted that early pieces were produced at a time when microwave ovens were not prevalent, and so they were not often marked accordingly. Whereas serious collectors might value experimental pieces or those mint-in-box, for the most part, Corelle fans are looking for something to use everyday.

With more than 100 patterns made over the years, there is a Corelle for every taste. To this day, Vitrelle Corelle continues to be manufactured, having been passed on in 1998 from Corning to a company known as World Kitchen.

But is it safe? In response to concerns about the presence of lead in paint used on vintage dinnerware, a retired chemist familiar with the topic spoke on background, pointing out that lead has historically been used in paint and glazes. But when lead in glazes is properly fired at a very high temperature, it is “largely non-extractable, since it is bound as lead oxide in a glass (silica) matrix.”

He added that 20th-century paint with “high” lead contents is primarily found on the rims of Corelle plates, or on other spots that are not likely to come into contact with acidic foods, fruits, vinegars, and sugars, all of which could cause some leaching of lead. “Children licking or abrading the colorful decoration,” as well as “many dishwasher exposures” could be problematic. Consequently, he suggested, “out of an abundance of caution,” children should not eat from Corelle (or other vintage chinaware). He further noted that a manufacturer’s representative has advised that vintage colored Corelle be used for decorative purposes only.

Whereas tested pieces of Corelle show the lead contents of decorated areas to be in the range of one to two percent, he pointed out, “Leaded glass crystal may contain 25 to 50 percent lead (as lead oxide).” Commonly used for adult beverages, it is “not a good idea to store wine or liquor in a decanter for prolonged periods.” But that’s another story.

There is, however, one other thing that should be noted about Corelle: “Break resistant” does not mean that Corelle doesn’t break. Because sometimes, glass shatters.

Above: Over the years, Corelle has been offered in more than 100 different patterns, including holiday motifs.

Below: “Butterfly Gold” is one of four original patterns of Corelle, introduced in 1970. The dinnerware was popular from the beginning, and the Corning factory, located in Upstate New York, scrambled to keep up with demand.

Above: “Spring Blossom Green” was popular when it was introduced in 1970 and remains a favorite among collectors.

Below: Hook-handled cups (left) were only made from late-1972 to 1982, making them a bit harder to find than closed-handled ones. Kallen finds them particularly fun to collect -- and use.

Below: Many fans of Corelle have remained true to it for 50 years. Others are rediscovering the versatile and durable dinnerware. With something to appeal to every taste, the popular dinnerware is estimated to be in approximately half of all American households.
