'There she is Miss America,' pageant celebrates 100 years

BY BARBARA MILLER BEEM

...and then there were two. Standing as close as their cotillion-style gowns would allow, anxiously clinging to each other. In just a few moments, one would be smiling through her tears, confident that she would be called upon if the other was unable to fulfill her duties. As for the other, she would soon be crying despite her smile as the emcee belted out, "There she is, Miss America."

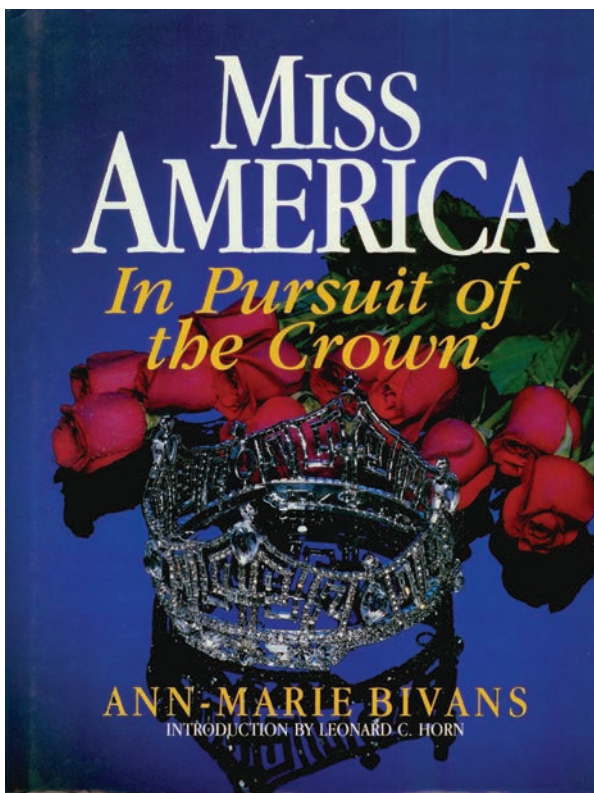

It didn't start out like this. For that matter, it's not like that anymore. But come Sept. 7, the Miss America Pageant will mark its 100th anniversary. And after a century of survival and change, this iconic ritual — or maybe the memory of it — continues to hold a special place in the hearts of dedicated fans and collectors.

"You have to remember that men were in charge," said Vicki Gold Levi, speaking of the pageant's beginnings. Hoping to extend the tourism season of Atlantic City, N.J., beyond Labor Day, businessmen built on the modest success of the 1920 "Fall Frolic" and enlisted pretty girls for their "Inter-City Contest," held on Sept. 7, 1921.

Representing Washington, D.C., was the crowd favorite, high school student Margaret Gorman, a champion marble shooter who resembled Mary Pickford with her long, curly hair. Deemed the winner that year, Gorman returned to Atlantic City to defend her crown the following year, not as "Miss Washington," but as "Miss America." She lost.

But the annual Boardwalk event continued to grow as a curious public watched from the sidelines, thanks to newsreels shown in movie theaters and coverage in popular magazines, including "Life." Local pageants came to sponsor state representatives (but not before Joan Blondell competed as "Miss Dallas" and Cloris Leachman as "Miss Chicago"). And other than during World War II, Atlantic City's Convention Hall became home to the annual spectacle.

The year 1945, however, was pivotal in the pageant's history, as Levi explained, ushering in an era that would arguably become Miss America's "Golden Age." No longer just a beauty pageant, the talent competition was added.

Above: Among affordable items sought by Miss America collectors are books written about the pageant, as well as ones penned by former Miss Americas. The sparkly tiara, however, is considered priceless.

That year, Bess Myerson, a concert pianist, became the first Jewish woman to win the title; significantly, she was also the first to be awarded a scholarship. At the following year's pageant, Levi (whose father was the first chief photographer for the coastal resort city) was onstage, serving as a page. Her task was to help carry the train of Myerson's velvet robe ("it was heavy") as she made her last walk down the runway as Miss America.

The year 1954 is also notable in Miss America history: Lee Merriweather was crowned Miss America 1955, and, for the first time, the final night of the competition was broadcast on live television. The following year, Bert Parks ("a nice guy," Levi noted) debuted as the host of the Saturday night show; famously serenading the winner ("There She Is"). He continued in that role through 1979.

Freeman Stamper was 12 years old when Marilyn Van Derbur was crowned Miss America in 1958. Years later, Stamper fondly remembers his "first Miss America." Stamper has been to Atlantic City twice for the weeklong pageant activities (in addition to being in the audience the night Phyllis George was crowned). Nearly half a century later he began a project to archive the participants in the Miss California program which led to his covetable collection of Miss America-related memorabilia.

Above: By 1933, the pageant had grown to include "a night of merriment," a "bather's revue," and an "evening gown" competition, as well as a "beauty ball" and a Boardwalk rolling chair parade.

Stamper said his artifacts can be broken into two categories: things related to the competition, and those that are souvenirs. Of the former, there are program books from local and state competitions, as well as the Miss America pageant itself. Publications instructing judges and auditors are of interest to those tracking the changes in the competition over the years, he said. Also, collectable are informational documents that instruct how to conduct a pageant, as well as tri-fold mailers used to sell tickets.

As for items falling into the souvenir category, these would include postcards, press photos, and ticket stubs. Over the years, the pageant garnered several sponsors: For a time, Oldsmobile released models of its new cars with "Miss America" emblazoned on the roof. Additionally, winners came to lend their name and likeness to products, including Kellogg's, which featured Vanessa Williams, Miss America 1984, on boxes of corn flakes.

Feature stories about Miss America have appeared in a variety of magazines, from "Saturday Evening Post" and "Life" to "Rubberneck," a magazine for U.S. Marines; many times, the winners' images were used in advertisements, which are also collectable.

Charms and bracelets, pins and watches: Miss America left her mark on all of these, as well as board games and commemorative plates. Sayco produced Miss America dolls in 1956 (with 50 wardrobe pieces) and again in 1957. Finally, several books have been written Below: Did she, or didn't she? Howard Chandler Christy's 1925 figure of a nude woman bore a strong likeness to that year's Miss America. The ensuing uproar was instrumental in disrupting the pageant for several years.

Harry Potter first edition conjured $1,600 bid at Sarasota auction

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

SARASOTA, Fla. — There was magic in the air on June 12-13 when Sarasota Estate Auction held what they termed a two-day “colossal” Asian and fine arts.

Perhaps the most enchanting lots were the 37 first edition Harry Potter books, which commanded impressive sums. A 1999 first London printing of J.K. Rowling’s third book, “Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban,” in its dust jacket, went for more than three times high estimates at $1,600. Another first edition copy of the same title sold for $1,200 on 22 bids. Yet another reached $950. There were 35 other Harry Potter volumes, ranging from a 2005 first edition of “Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince” ($40) to a 1999 “Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets” ($400). Perhaps it’s time to check your bookshelf!

Day one consisted of 887 lots, with the day’s high bid going to a Stieff sterling service for 12. It contained salad forks, tea and cream spoons, knives, shears and other dining utensils, in full measuring approximately 98 Troy ounces. Nine bids ran the price up from its $750 opener to $1,900, well under metal content value.

Also alluring were 19 walking sticks and canes. Several were silver-tipped and carved wood, getting anywhere from $50 to $225. Yet, the most unusual were the six free-blown glass pieces, each selling between $150 and $200.

Above: 37 first edition Harry Potter books were available. A first-run, U.K. printing of “Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban” sold for an impressive $1,600.

For those attracted by the Asian items, the first day didn’t disappoint. The lots were varied, plentiful, and sold across many price points. At the high end, a 101 by 30-inch Chinese Ming-style silk scroll painting sold for four times high estimates at $1,300 with over two dozen bids. Another silk scroll, a watercolor of a bird and blossoms sold similarly strong at $950.

armoire, with provenance to the Vittadini estate, sold for its opening bid of $800. Two Chinese Terra-cotta guardian lamps — one a foo dog roof tile, the other a monkey roof tile — sold for $700 and $650 respectively.

Later came an impressive 25-inch Chinese carved jade hardstone ship. While needing minor repair, it still sold for $300. From fur-

Vintage stylists can find fun in Harley-Davidson parts

“...and we’ll see the world through my Harley.” Back in the day, whenever I heard the twangy opening notes of “Motorcycle Mama,” I would crank up the volume on the AM radio of my 1970 Chevy Nova and sing along. Now, nearly 50 years later (yikes!), I once again have that song stuck in my head, thanks to the creative jewelry-making genius of Doug Heifetz.

I met Doug, a rabbi-turned-silversmith trading as “Lost & Forged,” a few years back, at the Baltimore Summer Antiques Show. In particular, his “silver ripple vintage spoon earrings” caught my eye, but so did several other innovative pieces of jewelry and home accessories that he had created, primarily from old pieces of silver flatware. His mission? To produce “surprising transformations that make upcycling irresistible.” When it comes to vintage style, it doesn’t get much better than this.

Over the years, we’ve stayed in touch, and I’ve followed along as he’s introduced new lines. About two years ago, he started making jewelry from old motorcycle parts. Not from just any motorcycles, mind you, but bits and pieces of Harley-Davidsons.

I was reminded of this when I recently heard of an antique dealer with a booth in a gigantic mall who specializes in, you guessed it, all things Harley-Davidson. Turns out that old biker jackets are rather popular these days, even among those who don’t ride. Inspired by the lyrics “We’ll get matching jackets and helmets, too”? Probably not: The kids, too young to remember that one-hit wonder, just know cool old stuff when they see it.

On the other hand, I can imagine that Harley-Davidson fans might seek out vintage magazine ads (suitable for framing), old H-D t-shirts (again, suitable for framing, if not for wearing), and souvenir pins and poker chips, patches and specialized license plates, all collectibles offered over the years. And then there’s Barbie (the doll), who in addition to her stints as prom queen, astronaut, and zoo doctor, appears to have hit the open road with Ken.

Back to Doug, whose Harley-Davidson jewelry is a bit more subtle, using genuine salvaged motorcycle metal (fender trim, complete with bold striping, as well as salvaged brass and copper rivets). Pairing these bits with other metals, including salvaged brass and elegant rose gold, Doug handcrafts what he describes as “sleek, contemporary upcycled” cuff bracelets, earrings, and necklaces.

“Fender trim can be scratched up,” he conceded, resulting in a look that is “sometimes gritty,” which can be a good thing, according to Doug, judging from his customers’ reactions. Not surprisingly, riders and non-riders alike find these pieces visually stunning. One customer in particular, an economist for the federal government, just wanted to express another side of herself, he noted.

For the record, neither Doug nor I are riders, but we get it. And after the past year, he concluded, this a good time to leave everything behind and enjoy the freedom of the open road.

Oh, one more thing about “Motorcycle Mama,” featured on an album of the same name and recorded by a group called “Sailcat.” The song was later covered by Bjork, the Swedish singer best remembered for wearing a “swan dress” to the 2001 Oscar ceremony. In my mind, the original is far superior. All the same, Sailcat’s rendition never made it to #1. And when I checked with my daughter, who knows about such things, she said that the original album has never passed her way. But I’m betting if Harley riders got ahold of it, they’d frame the cover and hang it in a place of honor.

Talk about a long and winding road. . . but that’s another song for another day.

To learn more about Doug’s creations, go to lostandforged.com.

Above: Although many see beauty in a Harley-Davidson, it’s hard to imagine that elegant jewelry could be made from salvaged motorcycle pieces.

Right: When Doug Heifetz sees parts of a motorcycle, he mentally envisions upcycled bracelets, earrings, and necklaces.

ther south in the Pacific came a collection of six Aboriginal bark paintings in various sizes, eventually reaching five times high estimates at $1,500.

Day two brought another 697 lots, including many more Asian items such as a pair of rare 12-inch silver Burmese monumental relief-center bowls that reached $2,500 on a dozen bids. A 26-inch signed Qing Dynasty porcelain tile table screen featuring a landscape, mounted in mahogany went for $2,000. Another signed Qing Dynasty tile table screen, 22 inches tall with a shepherd image went to $950.

Showcased on day two were 48 lots of Steuben glass, including chandeliers, lamps, and tableware. Taking top bid in the category at $1,900 was a 24 by 48-inch pendant chandelier with calcite acid cut glass and bronze mounts. An inverted dome chandelier with engraved calcite glass and four painted brass arms went for $450.

Day two also showcased plenty of additional art. Among the pieces was a huge 7-foot oil on canvas entitled “Pipa” by self-taught Russian painter Leonid Purygin (1951-1995) who was known for such large works. Starting price for the piece was $40,000; it closed at $42,000.

Seventeen paintings by Russian-born “non-conformist” painter Mihail Chemiakin (b 1943) were offered. One, a 48-inch signed oil on canvas titled “Petrovschina,” dated 1987 after Chemiakin was forced to flee to the states, reached $15,000. Five other Chemiakin pieces sold from $500 to $1,900, while surprisingly 11 of the paintings were passed over.

Good furniture was available on both days, much of it classical, like a 68-inch French-style bow-front curio cabinet, sold far more than estimated at $1,300 on heavy bidding. A 73-inch tall mirrored Edwardian English satinwood inlaid cabinet with glass doors and two lower drawers sold for $950. Another French-style piece a 54-inch circa 1840 Bombay chest featuring a marble top took $850, falling just short of estimates.

Bidders with modest budgets managed to take home some impressive items. On the first day, a 9-inch signed silver-plated trumpet vase was won for just $10. Soon after, a pair of early 20th-century French carved side chairs went for $20. On day two, a pair of signed watercolors depicting gold rush scenes by California artist Junie Harp Hamblett (1902-1994) was grabbed for $10. A New Zealand Style “tiki” statue by Sarasota sculptor and ceramicist Frank Colson, with provenance to his estate, was picked up for $20.

Below: The 98 Troy ounces of silver in this Stieff sterling service for 12 helped run the price up to $1,900.

Above: Pan-Pacific art came from China, Japan, Thailand, and even the southern Pacific like this collection of Aboriginal bark art. They sold for $1,500.

Left: Made of carved jade and other hardstone, this 25-inch Chinese sailing ship was won for $300.

Above: Standing 26 inches tall, this Qing Dynasty porcelain tile table screen (one of 3 available) attracted a $2,000 winning bid. The other two sold for $950 and $600.

Right: 43 lots hailing from the Southampton estate of Adrienne Vittadini & Gigi Vittadini were offered, including this Chinoiserie decorated and gilded armoire that sold for $800.

Air King allowed taking photos and listening to radio

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

One of the most sought after and interesting cameras /radios ever manufactured is the Air King A-410 Radio-Camera. Manufactured by Air King Products Company of Brooklyn, N.Y., the A-410 was made of wood with a red imitation snake-skin covering.

The camera part had a 50 mm single Protas meniscus lens, and the shutter was spring powered with capping plate. The focus on the camera was fixed, and it used 828 roll-film.

The radio on the A-410 was a four tube superheterodyne with a frequency range of 540 – 1600 Kilocycles. The four tubes, which may be nearly impossible to find today, are the IR5, IT4, IS5, and the 3Q4. The radio was battery powered so it worked as a transistor radio.

The A-410 was made in America, and the radio/camera pictured here along with the original box was mailed to White Radio Company of Little Rock, Ark. The serial number on the box is 7164, indicating that 1000s of the A-410 radio/cameras were manufactured.

The box presents a mystery since the manufacturing date on the box states "1920." The website for Radiomuseum.org indicates, "We believe that Air King Products did not manufacture radios before 1932. This poses an interesting problem that no historian seems able to answer, especially since "Air King" is not mentioned in Alan Douglas' book Radio Manufacturers of the 1920s.

The Air King A-410 Radio-Camera is highly sought after by collectors of both radios and cameras. One sold at auction in June 2015 for $746, but in mint condition, an A-410 is valued at $1,200, making them worth searching for at flea markets and estate sales.

Miss America

about the pageant, as well as books written about or by individual Miss Americas.

To begin a collection, Stamper suggested purchasing a program book, regardless of its condition. Such a $10 investment might provide an indication as to what is available to collect. On the other hand, he pointed out that the most expensive items top out in the hundreds of dollars, not the thousands, except for sashes and crowns (“held close to the winners’ hearts” they are, therefore, priceless). The “holy grail,” he suggested, would be a “Golden Mermaid” trophy, originally meant to be handed down from each year’s winner to her successor. But when Ruth Malcomson won in 1924, she refused to relinquish the trophy; consequently, Stamper said, new trophies were made (and dated) for the winners of 1921 (Gorman) and 1922-23 (Mary Katherine Campbell), as well as those crowned in 1925, 1926, and 1927.

Over the years, the pageant has endured its share of scandal. In 1925, artist Howard Chandler Christy unveiled an Oscar-like bronze statuette of a nude woman with a strong resemblance to Fay Lanphier, Miss America 1925. As a result, the pageant was suspended from 1928 to 1934 (except for an unsuccessful revival attempt in 1933), Stamper said. Although some maintain that this interruption was due to the Great Depression, he disputes this theory.

One thing is certain, though: Miss America has weathered numerous storms over the years and has attempted to adapt to societal changes. In 1989, to be more relevant, the platform requirement was added. The last swimsuit competition was held in 2017. And the pageant is no longer held in Atlantic City. As for Levi, though, she is proud to have been one of the judges (of Kate Shindle, Miss America 1998, she said “it was no contest”). And she never misses a year. “It’s in my DNA.”

Right: The “Golden Age” of Miss America is thought to have been from after World War II up into the 1960s. When Marilyn Van Derbur was crowned “Miss America 1958,” the pageant was closely followed by millions of families on tv.

Below: This she is. . .Margaret Gorman of Washington, D.C, winner of the 1921 “Inter-City Contest” in Atlantic City, New Jersey.

Above: An ad for merchandise from a 2002 program book. Program books are a good resource for collectors, according to Freeman Stamper.

Below: Sayco introduced a Miss America doll in 1956, offering 50 wardrobe items. All images courtesy of Freeman Stamper

Below: A phonograph record accompanied this 1957 Miss America doll by Sayco.
