Fairy lamps kept the night at bay with beautiful colors

BY MELODY AMSEL-ARIELI

For centuries, people burned oil lamps through the night to ward off the dark. Yet in the early 1800s, when small, safe, affordable candles were introduced, many switched to candle-burning nightlights instead. Shortly after, Samuel Clarke, a British candlemaker by trade, introduced clear, colorful glass lamps, each composed of base, flint bottom, candle dome holder, and decorative shade, as a way to promote his wares.

As his reputation grew, Clarke patented additional practical, attractive lamp designs featuring brightly hued, interchangeable porcelain, glass, tin, lacquered and bronzed domes, shades, and bases. Each, produced under the registered trade name "Fairy Light" and embossed with a fairy waving a light-tipped wand, was available in three basic sizes. The largest, simply known as "Fairy," was followed by "Pyramid" and "Wee" which featured the tiniest shade of all.

Through the years, Clarke commissioned highly respected British companies like Stevens & Williams, Taylor & Tunnicliffe, Royal Burslem, Royal Worcester, George, Davidson, Royal Doulton, Stuart and Sons, and Thomas Webb & Sons, to produce his designs.

The Clarke Pyramid & Fairy Light Company also designed a selection of chimney-type, double-duty, fairy lamp food-warmers "invaluable both in the night nursery and the sick room." This convenient, safe, economical model also bathed untold numbers of dark Victorian bedsides and hallways with soft, inviting light. In fact, due to its strong, flicker-free, slow-burning flame, the company often advertised them as "Burglar's Horrors."

Though Clarke vigorously defended his British and American Fairy trademark and patents, he eventually extended licenses to companies in Russia, France, Belgium, Austria, and Spain. Numerous competitors also copied unlicensed Clarke's models.

Whatever their source, however, all candle-burning nightlights eventually became known as "fairy lamps."

Clarke's fairy lamp advertisements, often full page, full color, and highly detailed, appeared in major British publications of the day, including Pottery Gazette and the Illustrated London News. They reached readers farther afield as well. Allen's Indian Mail, a prestigious publication serving "British & Foreign India, China, & All Parts of the East," for example, advertised the fairy lamp as "...the most elegant and perfect night light ever invented."

In 1885, Englishman Frederick Shirley patented a new, exciting invention at the Mount Washington Glass Works in New Bedford, Massachusetts — Burmese glass. This delicate creation, formulated with uranium oxide and traces of gold, initially produced pale, lemony yellow glass. Reheating it, however, shaded

Folk art made a splash when Garth’s sold Brandegee collection

BY SUSAN EMERSON NUTTER

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The Municipal Light Plant was lit, when Garth’s Auctioneers & Appraisers presented folk art and Americana from the lifetime collection of Ada and Robert Brandegee of Pittsburgh, Pa. Everything from Outsider Art by Howard Finster to carved decoys, African America pieces and stoneware crossed the auction block.

Leading the way was a lovely circa 1915 American folk art riverscape that was found in Maine. Oil on sailcloth, the unsigned image showed sailing ships surrounded by houses and a church. Framed, the work measured 21.75 inches high by an impressive 87 inches wide and sold for $12,500.

An American school portrait of a young man possibly by Asahel Lynde Powers (Vermont/Illinois, 1813-1843) was won with a bid of $3,900 against an estimate of $400 to $800. The oil on wood panel work’s signature was illegible as was the entire date, though “18__” was visible at the bottom.

“I first thought this image had been cut down, but that was not the case,” Garth’s CEO and principal auctioneer, Jeff Jeffers, said. “The painted scalloped liner made it evident it had not be altered from what the artist originally intended.”

Furniture was also on hand with a burl and root table from Great Camp Sagamore bringing $9,250. Garth’s catalog description describes the background concerning the table stating it came from the Vanderbilt lodge in the Adirondack Mountains of New York.

Below: An impressive 87 inches wide, this oil on sail cloth American folk art riverscape with sailing ships was bid to $15,625. Though unsigned, it was felt the work was done sometime between 1915 and 1920. The painting was found in Maine.

Choppers provided a decorative way to cut food

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Considering a knife might have been the earliest weapon/tool primitive man invented, it is fair to say humans have a long love affair with knives. A Food Chopper or chopper-knife is a kitchen knife, similar to an Alaskan ulu knife that is used for chopping food, usually meat, in preparation for cooking. Modern whaling in England began around 1617 and continued for nearly three centuries. Many foreign whaling ships docked at English ports during this time, including Japanese ships. It is from these Japanese ships and their

Garth's Auction

“William West Durant built the lodge in 1897, and in 1901, sold it to Alfred G. Vanderbilt who later named the lodge ‘Sagamore’”. Having a large birch burl knot with a polished and finished top, as well as a stump with roots base, the table measured 29 inches high and about 46 inches wide.

“What a visually fantastic table, and that provenance,” Jeffers said, adding, “I am happy to be able to state, the table is going back to Sagamore which is just wonderful.”

Catching the buyers’ attention was a circa 1800 American painted fan-back Windsor armchair made of mixed woods. Having a lobed crest, spindle back, turned stiles, an “H” stretcher, knuckle arms, and a shaped seat, this chair sold for $3,500. It had some issues – added nails in the back of the seat to secure posts; small repairs, the crest was possibly reworked, but its over-all attractiveness was very appreciated.

A Southern African American folksy rustic cupboard also did well this day bringing $3,500. Made of pine and circa 1900, it was thought the cupboard was possibly from Georgia. Its back and sides featured horizontal planking with the front having two doors with two panes of glass over two doors. What made this cupboard really stand out was its paint.

Below: Complete with wrapped yarn and feathers, this folk art whirligig was reputed to have been made by an Ohio African American river man. The circa 1920 piece had elaborate. It sold for $4,062.50.

Above: Having a blue patterned back, this 67 by 79 inches African American crazy quilt was bid to $4,920.

The ends were brick red. The front was dark green with white geometric decoration while the lower doors had round glass panes over a white painted circle with a central red star. The cupboard stood 75 inches high, was 38.5 inches wide and 25 inches deep.

“The Brandegees really appreciated folk art of all kinds and were especially drawn to color with this cupboard being a great example,” Jeffers states.

Other colorful items selling this day included an African American crazy quilt, 67 by 79 inches, $4,100 and an elaborate carved wooden whirligig with tin vanes showing three figures and a ladder on the base with a group of tribal warriors which sold for $3,250.

Many of the items in this auction were slightly larger in scale which were easily accommodated and perfectly displayed in the Brandegees large Pittsburgh, Pa., condo. “Take into consideration the couple bought three loft spaces and took out the sailors that ulu knives (historically over 5,000 years old) were introduced in the United Kingdom.

By the 1800s, many British craftsmen were hand-making figural food choppers or kitchen knives. These knives were highly decorative in style, often having images of chickens, humans, horses, birds, foxes, or hearts on the knives. The majority of these hand-made food choppers were made of steel, brass, and wood (the handles of nearly all British food choppers were made of wood). Prior to the Civil War these beautiful and clever knives were introduced in America, in places like Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, where middle class housewives were eager to keep up with their British cousins.

Antique food choppers were used for slicing or chopping meat along with vegetable knives, butcher knives, cleavers, and chef's slicing knives. Food chopping knives have a curved and thin crescent-shaped blade perfectly made to cutting through meats on a cutting board.

Over time, figural food processing knives crept into the mainstream market, and large steel corporations began to cast and forge food-processing knives as kitchen utensils. As food-processing knives grew in popularity, the figural look was dropped, and, today, unadorned food processing knives are still used.

Today, collectors, including knife collectors, eagerly search auctions and estate sales for these beautiful knives, often displaying them in kitchens, offices, and dens as figurative kitchen tools of the past.

Planning a trip? Event Finder can help you locate auctions and shows. All events listed under the Event Finder heading are advertised in this issue of AntiqueWeek. Events are listed by state, then by town with a brief description of the event, the opening date and finally the page number where the ad can be located.

Event Finder is only for advertised events. Auctioneers and show managers who want to be listed in our free calendar listings may continue to do so. Those free listings will be contained in the Auction or Show calendar sections.

While we have taken great care in compiling the information shown here, we strongly urge you to call the auctioneer or show manager listed for the event in case of cancellations or postponements. We also encourage auctioneers and show managers to contact us with any changes to their schedule. AntiqueWeek is not responsible for errors or omissions.

Young shoppers still looking for vintage items including brown furniture

BY BARBARA MILLER BEEM

Stop me if you've heard this one: Five high school students walk into an antique shop and. . .no, wait, although this sounds like the beginning of a joke, it isn't. And there's no punchline. Quite the contrary: It was plain to see that this group of friends was having a good time as they recently poked through the bountiful inventory of a bursting-at-the-seams consignment shop called "Objects Found."

The young shoppers didn't leave empty handed. Outside, clutching their newfound treasures, they encountered me, talking to the shop's owner for an "AntiqueWeek" feature. Our topic? What's the secret to attracting yet another generation of vintage shoppers? Neither one of us could have set this up better if we had tried.

To make a short story long, a little background information might be helpful. I live in Catonsville, Maryland, a suburb of Baltimore, where people ride around with bumper stickers on their cars that say "Life is Great in 21228." Once a neighborhood that offered wealthy city folk a respite from summertime heat and humidity, Catonsville has its share of big old houses and small town charm.

Below: The Artful Flea, a shop in Catonsville, Md., offers a winning combination of handcrafts and artwork, vintage treasures and, yes, plants. "Seeing Green" has a faithful following of "plant parents."

Back in early 2001, Ken and I began writing a monthly column, “Old Things Considered,” for a now-defunct local freebie publication. Just saying, it didn’t hurt that I had worked with the editor years before at a local newspaper. His only condition was that every column had to have a local angle. And therein lay the challenge, because Catonsville was, at the time, an antique shop desert, or so it seemed.

Then we heard from Reggie Sajauskas. By this time, Reggie had had a license to sell antiques for more than five years. A federal government employee, she began shifting gears after helping her then-mother-in-law downsize. With this firsthand experience, she decided it was time to do something to “protect the elderly.” Her timing was spot-on, she noted, as “the boomers were coming,” along with lots of stuff that their kids weren’t interested in keeping.

Starting with booths in nearby antique malls, Reggie graduated to a stand-alone shop, and then another, and then another. Today, in addition to a few booths and online auctions, she operates “Objects Found” at two locations, one in Catonsville and the other in nearby Arbutus. Most recently, she opened “Artful Flea,” a Catonsville shop that blends handcrafts, vintage items (things like jewelry, t-shirts, and Polaroid cameras), and houseplants, which are very much in demand.

Don't tell Reggie that there's no market for antiques. And don't even suggest to her that younger shoppers are not interested. "Brown" furniture is still selling, maybe not at the prices it was once commanding, but when younger people need something now, they can't wait for new furniture with a delivery backlog. "They want to take it home today," she said. "I sell a piece every day." Sure, the new acquisition might soon be treated to a coat of chalk paint, but, as I might point out, my 1970s home had its share of "antiqued" furniture that would otherwise have been broken up and used for firewood. As an aside, my Mom was really good at that technique.

Are you sitting down? Art pottery is selling, thanks to the recent "Plant-demic." Think McCoy, Roseville, and Weller, as well as milk glass. Again, not for the multi-hundreds of dollars that it used to command, but still at respectable prices. Sometimes, Reggie explained, one flowerpot purchase leads to another, and although they would not consider themselves to be collectors, young plant parents might focus on a specific line or color. Similarly, Bakelite jewelry sells (not because it's Bakelite, but for its look), and mismatched china has its fanbase. In general, the simple lines of anything mid-century is bound to find a new home.

Clearly, Reggie has her finger on the pulse. The people behind the desk at her shops are all friendly. Music playing in the background is upbeat. And her shops host frequent promotions. Most importantly, a regular turnover of wares keep shoppers coming back.

So what did the aforementioned teens buy? Vintage pinback buttons to customize their otherwise undistinguishable black backpacks, books (including a collection of "Garfield" comics and a biography of Walt Disney), and items for the prom. Other things they're looking for? Anything "Dr. Who." Vintage clothing. Jewelry, especially earrings, rings for their fingers, and bangle bracelets to stack on their arms.

Finally, I asked them if they were lifelong antiquers, dragged from shop to shop when they were young by their parents. They looked at me in amazement. "No," they all answered.

So now it's my turn to shake my head in wonderment.

Antique advertising convention set for July 19-22 in York, Pa.

YORK, Pa. — The Antique Advertising Association of America (AAAA) will hold its annual convention July 19-22 at the Wyndham Garden York Hotel in York, Pa.

From Wednesday evening to Saturday morning, the busy convention schedule will include seminars, time for "room hopping" each day, a silent auction, banquet meals, raffles and games with great prizes, and fellowship!

The all-star line-up of seminar presenters will proudly feature legendary Coca-Cola and soda pop “guru”, Allan Petretti; noted baseball-related tobacco authority, Jon Canfield; and President of the National Barber Shop & Shaving Collectables Association, Justin Nash.

Dozens of dealers from throughout the United States will be bringing thousands of vintage advertising items for sale including antique and collectible signs, tins, displays, general store, drug store, soda fountain, ephemera, gas and oil, tobacco, bottles, jars, soda pop, breweriana, premiums, and much more at all price points.

Registration is $130 per person, which includes all activities, two banquet dinners, one buffet lunch, and, for hotel guests, free Deluxe Continental Breakfast each day. To register to attend the convention online go to: <https://aaaa.regfox.com/2023>.

For those unable to attend the entire convention, there will be a free Antique Advertising Show, Auction, and Sale at the Wyndham Garden York on Friday, July 21. For further information, contact plefkov@gmail.com or call 317- 594-0658.

Established in 1992, AAAA is the only national club representing all facets of antique and collectible advertising. Membership benefits include the annual convention, a national membership directory, and two award-winning newsletters, PastTimes, published quarterly, which is a hard-copy, glossy, magazine-type publication and the Checkerboard, which is an e-newsletter published the other eight months of the year. Interested individuals can join AAAA for $40 per year on its website: www.pastimes.org/join.

Bidders played some merry tunes at Leonard's

BY NANCY KELLY

WESTLAND, Mich. — Music played a beautiful tune at a recent online offering by Leonard's Auction Service.

A 1920s J. P. Seeburg Piano Company tiger oak nickelodeon coin operated player piano stood 62 inches tall by 46 inches wide. It had stained glass panels on the top front with working backlights. The Emerson motor and mechanical inner works as well as the cabinet itself were all in excellent condition. It was taken away with a final bid of $5,000. Prices do not include the buyer's premium. Seventy-eight lots of nickelodeon paper music rolls were claimed with high bids from $5-$105. The top one featured fox trot and waltz music and the second highest consisted of march tunes.

A few other unusual instruments also did very well, including a Yamaha wood bass recorder with hard case. This low-voiced member of the woodwind family measured 72 inches long and was complete with its metal pipe mouthpiece. It was in stellar condition and left for its next gig with a high bid of $560. An immaculate Bellafina Bionda 75-inch-tall double bass with spruce laminate top, ebony fingerboard, and soft case was eagerly taken with a final bid of $450. A more exotic offering was an early brass instrument called a serpent that consisted of 8 feet of tubing gently bent into a snake-like shape. This Renaissance era horn plays in the low-mid trombone range and is fingered with holes on the side. It found a new fan with a final bid of $270

A couple of vintage reel-to-reel tape recorders from the 1970s also appealed to the music audience. The Pioneer model RT-701 was reported to power on but was not tested. This machine was unusual as it was a rack mountable construction, equipped with three motors and 4-track recording capability. Complete with three cables, it drew a final bid of $265. The other model was a Pioneer RT-1011L reel to reel tape recorder that also powered on, but the reel mechanism was frozen. This more conventional tabletop model cleared a final bid of $200. 12 Maxwell reel to reel boxed recording tapes, most from the 35-180 series high output mastering tapes, sold as a group with a $310 bid.

There was minimal jewelry in this auction, but one piece really stood out. A 14k gold Art Deco diamond and ruby flip top watch band was intricately designed and skillfully constructed with a semi-circle of rubies surrounding a large diamond, along with other rubies highlighting the setting. While this did not include a watch, it still drew a hefty price of $1,340.

A group of engines were gathered up for this sale, with the hit-and-miss models taking the top honors. A 5 horsepower, 450 RPM antique Eclipse hit and miss engine by Myrick Machine Co. Olean, N.Y., standing 49 inches tall was the most popular. This vertical, air-cooled, flywheel-driven machine may have been used to drive a well pump. The sturdy workhorse was claimed with a final bid of $2,760. Two Vintage Fairbanks Morse Z hit and miss engines were taken with bids of $365 and $350, while a very detailed vintage Wileco toy steam engine made in Germany closed at $290.

Mission oak seemed to be the preferred style of furniture and there was a lot to choose from. The highest bid was drawn by the Stickley Mission oak queen size spindle bed frame with precise detail and sturdy build that closed at $890. An unusual Ragsdale Mission oak Prairie Craftsman double pedestal table lamp proved popular, drawing a final bid of $805 despite a crack in the wood shade. Other desirable pieces included the Stickley Mission oak rolling server with a 70-inch-wide fold out top, dovetail drawer joints, and two cabinet doors that was taken for $800, a Stickley Harvey Ellis Mission oak TV console with inlaid accents that left for $765, and a handsome Stickley Mission oak frame black leather cushion sleeper sofa with 2 leather accent pillows that drew a $720 bid.

Some lovely home furnishings were presented, each ready to move right into a new location. There was a 30-inch Tiffany style Elizabethan lead glass table lamp with a bronze base and 22 inch multicolored shade that was quite the eye-catching beauty. It finished with a high bid of $500. A selection of 14 clocks provided a variety of options for home decoration. The leader in this category was the Seth Thomas oak double perpetual office calendar regulator wall clock with Roman numerals, a second hand, and a second face that displayed the day and month. This pendulum time piece with its key was in working condition and left with a high bid of $420.

A novelty collectible rounds out this report. Part musical instrument, part conversation piece, the mahogany Hofbauer-Gottingen Harmonipan hand cranked organ and cart presented a very unusual package. The burl walnut case was decorated with inlaid flowers, musical instruments, and the logo "Harmonipan Hofbauer - Gottingen". This contemporary item was produced in the last half of the 20th century, stood 42 inches tall, and found a new home with a high bid of $855.

A trip to Paris was just the ticket; Paris, Texas, that is

“Why?”
This is all my daughter could say when I told her that her mother and I were going to Paris for spring break this year. Paris, Texas, that is, population less than 25,000.

“For the heck of it,” I replied.
We try to get away for a few days each year during spring break, and my adult kids are always welcome to come along if they’d like. This year, they were both game, even though the destination was less than exotic.

Paris is about an hour-and-a-half drive from our house, and we had never been there before, which makes it perfect for an overnight road trip. While in this thriving metropolis (it’s actually a pretty cute little town), we ate at a restaurant called 107 (the catfish was delicious, the street tacos were pedestrian), bailed on our hiking plans at the “Trail de Paris” since it was so cold, visited the Red River Valley Veterans Memorial (to call it touching and tastefully done is an understatement), and of course checked out the Eiffel Tower replica, which is a scale model less than 10 times the height of the real deal. And it has a cowboy hat on top, naturally.

We also rummaged around the town square, the type of which every small, old town in Texas seems to have. In addition to a gorgeous courthouse, a cool coffee shop, and an old movie theater, it had several antique shops, including a place called Remember When. This surprisingly robust store had a large array of vintage pop culture collectibles, including comic books, magazines, action figures, posters, and much more.

I grabbed several unopened boxes of cards for $5 to $8 each to sell by the pack at my antique mall booth: everything from Disney’s The Hunchback of Notre Dame and Pocahontas to The Indiana Jones Chronicles to Independence Day (the 1996 movie, not the holiday). The Pocahontas card packs were especially cool because they were in a retail display rack. I bought multiple boxes of all these cards, plus a huge tub of over 1,000 loose packs of Johnny Quest cards by Upper Deck for $20, meaning they cost me less than $.02 per pack.

I picked up some cool stuff for my personal collection as well, including complete sets of The Black Hole and Above: Our trip to Paris turned out to be a great idea!

E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial cards. Most notably, I bought a rare Wonder Woman shadow box produced by Studio One in 1974. At first glance, this “3D wall comic” looked homemade (in a good way), but I quickly realized it was licensed by DC Comics. The kicker was the price tag: $15. I grabbed it so fast it’s a good thing I didn’t break the glass or the metal frame housing it. This gorgeous display piece is worth considerably more than a ten and a fiver. Worthpoint auction house recently sold one for $214, and, as of this writing, there’s an example on eBay listed at $375. There’s no way I’m selling it, though—this bad boy (girl, actually) will look awesome in my game room.

Instead of renting a room in Paris for the overnight stay, we drove 20 minutes north to a casino/hotel just over the border in Oklahoma. We enjoy playing the slots, and we had a couple of free rooms (like I said, we enjoy playing the slots), so we indulged. A ferocious storm blew through while we there (it was Oklahoma, after all), but we were safe in the casino’s Chili’s (it was either that or random bar food), and I was in fact quite pleased by how the entire trip went down. I did well on the slots, I was happy with my purchases, and we had some great family time. In short, it was fun and profitable!

Hopefully, a trip to France is in our future.

But until then, “We’ll always have Paris.”

Paris, Texas, that is.

Below: Paris, Texas has an Eiffel Tower replica. Naturally, there’s a cowboy hat on top.

Below: I made a fantastic find at Remember When, which holds tons of treasures, including comic books, trading cards, and much more.

Please report late delivery

AntiqueWeek strives to provide customers with the best delivery possible. Occasionally, areas of the country do not receive timely delivery of the paper. The goal of AntiqueWeek's late delivery staff is to work with the USPS to get your paper to you – on time, every time. If your paper is not delivered on or before the issue date, please let us know.

These areas experienced multiple reports of late deliveries during the week of 4/18/23: Pennsylvania.

These states reported single reports of late delivery for the same week: Missouri, Arizona.

1-800-ASK-USPS or 800-275-8777 & 800-877-8339

Our staff members will continue to address the late delivery reports we receive. We are constantly striving to rectify the late delivery problem. Please call our customer care center at (800) 876-5133 or email subscriptions@antiqueweek.com to report late delivery. Continue to report delivery issues if problems are not fixed after the first call so staff members can continue to report these difficulties to the USPS.

In order to ensure everyone can see the paper on time, AntiqueWeek uploads each issue every Saturday morning to its website. The online issue is free to subscribers and totally keyword searchable. Visit www.antiqueweek.com.

Fairy Lamps

this pale shade into salmon pink, evocative of an exotic sunset.

Though Mount Washington Glass Works may not have produced Burmese glass fairy lamps itself, within a year it granted Thomas Webb & Sons, which specialized in engraved crystal and colored glass, permission to produce Burmese glass domes and shades in England. Many Webb fairy lamp domes and shades, advertised as Queen’s Burmese Ware, bore a popular berries-and-leaves pattern enhanced with painted accents. Due to lack of original documentation and illustrations, however, sources of many Webb Burmese ware designs remain a mystery.

Webb fairy lamps, designed, named, and numbered by Jules Barbe from 1886 through 1888, boasted bright botanical themes. While others featured impressed or acid-etched identification stamps reading “Thos Webb & Sons, Queen’s Burmese Ware, Patented,” scores bore only flimsy paper labels.

During this era too, Clarke apparently granted The Phoenix Glass Works and the F. W. Kralert & Company the right to manufacture and market his fairy lamps in the United States. In addition, the Hobbs, Brocunier & Company, later known as the United States Glass Company, manufactured similar lights under the name of “Acorn Lamps.” Yet American fairy lamps became most fashionable after Clarke, displaying thousands at the 1893 Chicago World’s Fair, exhibited them across the country.

Clarke, a marketing genius, then designed a crown-shaped fairy lamp to mark Queen Victoria’s 1897 Golden Jubilee, with the monarch reportedly acquiring 1,500 for her own personal use. Then as gas-lit and electric lighting became widespread, he introduced the “Cricklite” fairy lamp, a luxurious model featuring clear glass domes topped by decorative silk shades lit with either wick-wax or electric light. Some served as elegant flower holders or graced formal dinners and similar settings. Others brightened garden walkways, country houses, conservatories or, when grouped together, formed shimmering drawing room chandeliers. Though a number of other European and American candle and glass works continued producing similar pieces, decorative fairy lamps largely fell from use by the 1920s.

In the early 1950s, however, the Fenton Art Glass Company began producing candle-lit and electrified fairy lamps in alluring shades of opalescent green, blue, rose, and cranberry. Both the Pairpoint Glass Company and Gundersen Glass, a lamps, as well as images from 19th century design books and newspaper advertisements.

The club’s resource page includes helpful terminology as well as back issues of the Fairy Lamp Newsletter dating from 1996 and reviews of historical patents for Victorian Era Fairy Lamps, candle lamps, and food warmers.

In addition, the Resources area offers articles on 19th-century and contemporary Fairy and Candle Lamps, links to auction results past and present, suggests sources for additional research, and features a number of glass-related instructional videos. It also links to copies of select fairy lamp book PDFs — some currently unavailable in print.

“Fenton Art Glass: Fairy Lamp & Lights,” by Peggy Whiteneck, explores lamp origins, history, and development of its various forms, glass treatments, and decorations through many full-captioned, richly colored photos. “Fairy
