Haeger pottery variety means something for everyone

BY DONALD-BRIAN JOHNSON

During its 145-year existence, Haeger Potteries of Dundee, Ill., successfully and smoothly moved from the utilitarian to the decorative. For today's collectors, Haeger creations offer what advertisements from the early 1950s called "a galaxy of exquisite designs. . . visual achievements symbolizing expert craftsmanship and pottery-making knowledge."

Particularly captivating is the modernistic Haeger output of the 1940s and '50s – from "panther" TV lamps and figurines of exotic Oriental maidens, to chomping-at-the-bit statuary of rearing wild horses and snorting bulls. But the Haeger story began long before then, with the Great Chicago Fire of 1871.

Company founder David Haeger had recently purchased a budding brickyard on the banks of Dundee's Fox River. Following the fire, his firm turned out bricks by the bushelsful, all needed to replace decimated Chicagoland structures.

For the next 30 years or so, industrial production remained the primary emphasis of the then-named "Haeger Brick and Tile Company." Although some decorative flowerpots were produced in the early 1900s, it wasn't until 1914 that the company, under the leadership of David's son Edmund, turned its attention to artware.

According to popular lore, Edmund's decision to refocus Haeger was inspired by a look at art pottery created by employee Fred Rieke, a talented German potter. No doubt equally persuasive: the burgeoning popularity of the Arts and Crafts movement. Soon, the repurposed (and rechristened) "Haeger Potteries Inc." was on its way.

From the very beginning, Haeger was distinguished by its starry roster of designers, often wooed away from competing firms. First up: J. Martin Stangl, previously glaze wizard for Fulper. As Haeger's ceramics engineer from 1914 until the dawn of the Roaring '20s, Stangl performed the same magic he had worked at Fulper: steering a company away from industrial production, and into the creation of artware. The design emphasis of Stangl and his Haeger contemporaries was on classically simple, uncluttered Arts & Crafts stylings. Haeger's roster of pots, jugs, vases, bowls, and candleholders all proved big hits with buyers.

Interim designers kept the Haeger kilns busy until the 1924 arrival of Franz Koenig. By then, Art Deco was just beginning to emerge as the latest design trend; that position would be solidified by the Paris Exposition of 1925. Soon, Jazz Age consumers wanted more than just the soothing simplicity of Arts and Crafts. What they wanted was a riot of color, and Haeger was happy to oblige, thanks to Koenig's inventive glaze expertise.

Haeger Potteries reached its earliest zenith with a pavilion at the 1934 Chicago World's Fair, A Century of Progress. Fair-goers, (and there were millions of them), became acquainted with the Haeger name thanks to the exhibit. It included, in addition to home environment settings decked out with

Tiki-themed event supports Moai restoration effort

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

COLUMBUS, Ohio — In 1961, the epic Polynesian restaurant, the Kahiki, opened in Columbus, Ohio. While tiki bars sprung up in virtually every city in that era, the Kahiki was virtually unequaled. The supper club was nearly a city block large and cost over $1 million to build (nearly $10 million in today's dollars).

Guests were transported to a tropical paradise, with a 40-foot-tall war-canoe-looking building as its centerpiece. Two 20-foot Moai statues graced the entrance and lit up the night with their flaming headdresses.

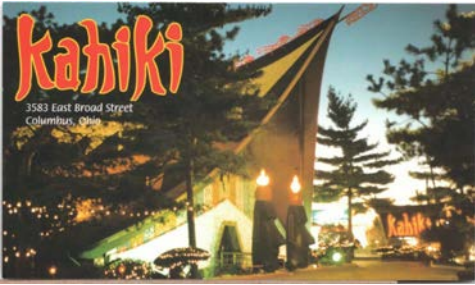

Once inside, visitors were immersed in the sights, sounds, and tastes of the South Seas. Tropical flora and bamboo created an island village atmosphere. A two-story tiki fireplace anchored one end of the building. Walls were lined with aquariums filled with tropical fish. There were even faux thunderstorms.

Their oversized illustrated cocktail menu touted dozens of potent libations with names like Idol's Cast and Zombie, and a now-iconic bourbon cocktail of their invention called the Port Light. A famed "Mystery Drink" was served in a smoking volcano bowl, delivered by a Cuisine leaned heavily toward Cantonese dishes, during the era when Chinese dining was still considered "exotic." Ironically, their food's popularity ultimately spelled the Kahiki's demise, when the owners shifted their energies from running the restaurants to selling frozen dinners.

The acclaim regularly drew dignitaries and celebrities including Disney's Michael Eisner, Zsa Zsa Gabor, and Bob Hope. Sadly, time and changes in taste forced the Kahiki's closure. Despite being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places in 1997, the spectacular building was razed in 2001 to make room for a Walgreens. Heartbroken locals still recount dates, graduation celebrations, and family gatherings in its enthralling setting.

The demolition was indelicate. The Left: This was the forlorn state for those illustrious Moai statues after the Kahiki was razed. One will thankfully be saved. (Photo: John Holt "Tiki Skip") two-story tiki fireplace was craned through the roof (a video of that is still available on YouTube) and ended up in a Vermont field. Much of the furniture, dishware, and decor, went into storage and was later auctioned. The two grand statues from the entrance were salvaged but ended up damaged and derelict, weeds growing through them like junked cars.

For a dozen years, tiki was absent from Columbus, until a downtown bar, the Grass Skirt (2012-2019) did their part to revive it. The year "the Skirt" closed, on Columbus' north side, local coffee bar owner Dustin Sun decided to

Don't throw in the towel, use it as a statement piece instead

Perhaps you remember that advertisement for a credit card, the one that ended with the admonishment, "Don't leave home without it." Or maybe you've seen the signs (or have one posted by your back door) that remind you "Phone? Wallet? Keys?" But if you ever happen to find yourself as the last person on Earth, you'd best heed the advice of author Douglas Adams, who made it clear in "The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy" that a towel is "about the most massively useful thing an interstellar hitchhiker can have." Turns out, though, that even if you don't have plans to leave Mother Earth, a towel is a rather nice thing to have around the house.

The first celebration of "Towel Day" was on May 25, 2001, thereby marking the two-week anniversary of Adams' passing. Ever since, the tradition has continued, not every fortnight, but annually, on May 25, as fans of the comic science fiction writer, in his honor, wear a towel around their necks. But if you ask me, this is a good excuse to celebrate towels, incorporating them with vintage style into everyday life.

When thinking about towels, my first thought was pretty obvious: Frame special towels and hang them on the wall. Select those towels that have a special meaning, those from a favorite vacation spot, or ones that are just too special to use (say, a kitchen towel that pictures the album cover of The Beatles' "Abbey Road"). Works for me.

Feeling crafty? With some basic sewing skills, it's easy to whip up linen towels, transforming them into pillow shams, table runners, and tote bags. But surely there has to be more.

Deciding to go bicoastal, I took this as an excuse to check in with two friends of "Vintage Style," both of whom are (very) active members of try his hand at a tiki bar. It was a fortu- itous decision. Huli Huli effectively be- came Columbus’ “Tiki Central” and the de facto steward of Kahiki memories.

They also became the custodian of nu- merous Kahiki artifacts. In addition to memorabilia lining their walls, in 2023, Huli Huli hung from their ceiling a 12- foot outrigger canoe once belonging to the Kahiki. On its heels came another triumph. Through a lot of wrangling, and a network of colleagues, one of the abandoned Moai made its way to Huli Huli.

By the time it reached their patio, all that remained was the rebar frame. The original concrete had been removed for safety reasons. It was tarped for safe- keeping and both literally and figura- tively kept “under wraps.”

In July 2023, Huli Huli disclosed

what they had, stating, “We have been lucky to have acquired one of the Moais that stood at the entrance of the Kahiki. Our plan is to restore it to its former glo- ry.” Making its debut, the rebar skeleton was up-righted on the patio, strung with tea lights for nighttime diners, and a commemorative plaque added for public information.

The team began searching for skilled craftspeople who could recreate the stat- ue and get it functioning again. Resto- ration would require strengthening the frame, reskinning with new stucco and stone, painting, crafting a base, and get- ting the flames functioning. Huli Huli manager Rick Ryan estimated the cost at $15,000-$20,000. So, fundraising commenced, beginning with a GoFund- Me page, which to date has raised over $6,000 toward the project.

Then, on Saturday, April 27, Huli Huli held a fundraising event they called, “A project 24 years in the making” bringing together tiki artists, vintage sellers, en- tertainment, a special menu, and auc- tioning items to fund the restoration.

A vetted group of eight vendors brought merchandise spanning tiki’s midcentury heydays to today’s works. Vendors included Ohio Tiki Nuts from Tallmadge, Ohio, with a space filled with vintage Polynesian decor, vintage and modern mugs, and custom t-shirts. Tracy Helber, owner of Carroll, Ohio’s, TH Tiki, brought one-of-a-kind hand- made mugs. Tiki lighting specialist Lena Simonian had items like puffer fish and Japanese float lamps. Nearby, was wa- tercolor artist Jusin Frehs. Columbus’ Neon Road Trip had vintage tiki mugs, carvings, and Polynesian decor.

Doug Motz, co-author of “The Kahiki Supper Club” and “The Kahiki Scrap- book” signed books, and even brought a pair of original Kahiki dining chairs. His husband, Todd Popp, sold hand-made gravel art renditions of the Moai.

DJ and co-author of the Kahiki Scrap- book, Jeff Chenault, spun Exotica from composers like Martin Denny, along with vintage Hawaiiana and surf mu- sic. He was followed by DJ Doc Lava who kept the vibe going into the eve- ning. Mid-day, California-based Maha- na Dance Company gave a Polynesian dance performance.

Throughout the day, there was a si- lent auction, with about two dozen pic- es of Kahiki memorabilia, artwork, and other collectibles. It was complemented by two raffles featuring other collec- tibles. There was also a special fundrais- er cocktail lineup that included Kahiki classics like the Port Light and Coffee Grog.

Several former Kahiki employees showed up, including one who was a Mystery Girl circa 1986-1987. They hap- pily recounted their time at the famed restaurant and weren’t shy about pick- ing up some memorabilia for themselves.

Restoration is expected to be com- pleted in 2025. If you’d like to donate to the efforts, you can go directly to the GoFundMe page at: https://gofund. me/1ab91e94 or visit hulihulipowell. com.

Some donation levels include a name- plate at the statue’s base naming bene- factors. Any excess donations will be placed in a Kahiki trust fund to preserve other items from the beloved restaurant.

Don't Throw In The Towel

the Vintage Tablecloth Lovers Club. I caught up with Jimmie Bucci (who lives in Massachusetts) and Teresa Stone (in Washington).

Like other tablecloth enthusiasts, Jimmie also collects towels, primarily those made of linen, which generally have clearer, more interesting graphics, as well as a more sophisticated look, than those made of terrycloth. Instead of keeping his collection in a box, where he and his friends can't enjoy them, Jimmie displays towels throughout his house, from the kitchen (on cabinet doors) and the dining room (on the backs of chairs) to the back of the bathroom door. "They're easy to display."

Teresa agreed, noting "I think towels are especially fun since (unlike tablecloths) they are a small 'pow' graphic." Like Jimmie, she looks for ways to enjoy her favorites, including using a ladder for rotating displays. But that's not all. Because of their size, she said that they work well as valances atop a window. She noted that towels that were originally meant to be hung by a wooden dowel can easily be transformed into curtains by using a skinny tension rod instead.

In the kitchen, Teresa lines her refrigerator drawers with towels; using ones that picture veggies adds to the fun. Similarly, towels with a summer-time theme make a tray bearing cold drinks extra special. While towels are a good gift, consider the environmentally friendly idea of wrapping a gift in a towel, she suggested. She offered a final tip: To make her stored towels easily accessible, she organizes them by holidays.

And then there's George Auld, an "AntiqueWeek" reader who lives "north of the border" in British Columbia. Thanks to annual purchases, George now has what could be characterized as an "accidental collection," spurred on by the fact that he appreciates the convenience of having the days and months of an entire year viewed at a glance. Unfortunately, his ritual of regularly purchasing a new linen calendar has become increasingly challenging, and so he's taken to recycling his old towels when they might be used again as calendars. Sometimes, that wait can be a lengthy one, so in the meantime, he uses them. Because in the end, it's not worth throwing in (or out) the towel because, as George agrees, the old ones really do dry better than the new ones.

Adding decals to Fiesta shapes made Sunporch

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Homer Laughlin China Company, founded around 1879, was a leading maker of dinnerware in the United States throughout the 20th century. In 2020 Homer Laughlin sold its name and product line to Steelite.

Homer Laughlin is famous for many pottery lines, but, perhaps, its most famous line is Fiesta.

Throughout its long life, Fiesta ware changed. Homer Laughlin often decorated regular Fiesta with transfer decals and marketed these “new” wares under other names, such as Fiesta Casuals and Amberstone. One such line of transfer Fiesta is Sunporch pottery, which has always had a solid base of collectors.

Homer Laughlin’s Sunporch line, which is part of Laughlin’s Century line of dinnerware, consists of a decal pattern showing pieces of Fiesta on a patio table beneath an umbrella. There is a definite Mexican-influence of patterns and colors, including a hacienda appearance to this line of dinnerware. The umbrella is a colorful red and white, and the three primary art colors—red, blue, and yellow, are the dominant color themes. There is even the hint of terra cotta tile on the patio floor. A white pergola with red flowers completes the decal.

Century ware is most often referred to as a shape since all of the dishes used an ivory color background.

Collectors should beware. Homer Laughlin patterns and lines have been reproduced, including its Sunporch line. Study your selections carefully before purchasing Sunporch dinnerware, especially if you are building a collection for long-term investment.

Right: Homer Laughlin Sunporch serving platter that is over 13 inches across. This piece is valued at $140.

Above: Considered Fiesta ware, this 6.5-ounce Sunporch tumbler by Homer Laughlin is valued at $55.

Above: Homer Laughlin Sunporch medium vase that is valued at $175.

Please report late delivery

AntiqueWeek strives to provide customers with the best delivery possible. Occasionally, areas of the country do not receive timely delivery of the paper. The goal of AntiqueWeek's late delivery staff is to work with the USPS to get your paper to you – on time, every time. If your paper is not delivered on or before the issue date, please let us know.

These areas experienced multiple reports of late deliveries during the week of 04/09/24: Indiana, Ohio, Georgia, New Jersey.

These states reported single reports of late delivery for the same week: New York, Arkansas, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Wisconsin, Florida.

1-800-ASK-USPS or 800-275-8777 & 800-877-8339

Our staff members will continue to address the late delivery reports we receive. We are constantly striving to rectify the late delivery problem. Please call our customer care center at (800) 876-5133 or email subscriptions@antiqueweek.com to report late delivery. Continue to report delivery issues if problems are not fixed after the first call so staff members can continue to report these difficulties to the USPS.

In order to ensure everyone can see the paper on time, AntiqueWeek uploads each issue every Saturday morning to its website. The online issue is free to subscribers and totally keyword searchable. Visit www.antiqueweek.com.

Haeger Pottery

Haeger, an actual working factory. Once visitors had viewed the step-by-step pottery production process, how could they could resist picking up a piece of Haeger on the way out?

The World’s Fair brought Haeger to America’s attention – but its grandest days of glory were still ahead. 1938 saw the promotion of Edmund Haeger’s forward-thinking son-in-law Joseph Estes to General Manager, the arrival of equally forward-thinking designer Royal Arden Hickman, and the introduction later that year of the wildly popular “Royal Haeger” line. The “Royal” moniker, Estes always insisted, came about by accident. He’d been thinking along the lines of “Royal Doulton”; only after hiring his new designer did he learn of Hickman’s unusual first name. Although Royal Hickman departed Haeger in the mid-1940s, the “Royal Haeger” name remained.

An Oregon native, Hickman was equally at home creating in crystal, wood, and aluminum as he was in creating pottery. Snapped up by Haeger after stays at J.H. Vernon, Kosta Crystal, and his own Ra Art, Hickman quickly made his mark. Gone were any Old World remnants of earlier years. No more Haeger planters depicting winsome cherubs, dozing donkeys, and storks en route to the delivery room. Replacing them were leaping fish, birds taking wing, and a snarling black panther. Since, the Haeger panther was so widely imitated by other ceramics firms, and was only distinguished by a paper label, it’s often hard to determine the Hickman original. Two clues to look for: hooded eyelids, and absolutely no embellishments.

Earlier Haeger figurals were generally of animals and humans “at rest.” Under the guidance of Hickman, and the soon-to-follow Eric Olsen, motion was key. The energy, and air of underlying excitement in the designs, were ideally suited to the action-packed atmosphere of World War II, and the postwar new day that followed. In a 1940 interview, Hickman commented on the change:

“American ceramics are better than they have ever been before. The complete proof of this is the fact that Europe is enviously eyeing every piece we make over here – if not from the standpoint of quality, then from design and the methods of execution. The happy job of the ceramic designer is to try to make more beautiful things for everyday living.”

In 1944, Hickman left Haeger, following a dispute over lamp production. In the years that followed, he returned for occasional free-lance assignments, juggling that with his work for such firms as Heisey and Bruce Fox Aluminum. Hickman’s Haeger successor, Eric Olsen, continued to enliven the Haeger inventory with ever-increasing pottery gems, perfectly in step with the spirit of the “fantastic ‘50s.”

A native of Norway, Olsen’s early experience included stints with Wedgwood and Spode, which seemed unlikely sources for his later, exuberant Haeger designs. However, until his retirement in 1972, Olsen designed at least 90 percent of the Haeger line.

Olsen’s arrival in 1947 coincided neatly with Haeger’s “Diamond Jubilee.” Although technically the company’s 75th anniversary was 1946, the event was celebrated during the 1947-48 season. That’s when much of the new Olsen line made its debut, and full-scale production resumed following the war years.

From towering abstract figural lamps to long-legged colts, mystic pre-Columbian priests to self-absorbed stalking lions, Eric Olsen’s Royal Haeger designs were ideal for the soon-to-be-ultra-current “1950s modern” décor. They convey the essence of movement and attitude, with an absolute minimum of line and detail. The massive upper torso, lowered head, and forceful hooves of Olsen’s famed semi-abstract “Red Bull,” for example, evoke power and danger to a degree that more realistic depictions only dream of achieving. As Olsen noted in later years, “A work of art is not only based on the ‘Beautiful,’ but also on such ingredients as ‘Interest,’ ‘Character,’ ‘Craftsmanship,’ and ‘Imagination.’”

Facing foreign competition, consumer frugality, and changing tastes, Haeger Potteries closed its doors in 2016, after 145 years. Marshall Field & Co. noted that, as far back as 1929, when touting the line to its customers: “Haeger Pottery will become an indispensable
