Hatpins make a fine point in any collection

BY DOUG GRAVES

From the humble beginnings of simply designed to keep a hat or veil in place, hatpins evolved into pointed fashion statements that are inspiring collectors today.

While hatpins peaked in popularity between the 1890s and 1920s, they date back to the Middle Ages. In 1832, the pin making machine was patented in the U.S. and production of pins with long tapering points began and hand-made pins fell out of existence. Within the next two years England also began producing machine-made pins.

In 1903 the hatpin's popularity grew enormously when music hall actresses American Lillian Russell and English-woman Lillian Langtry (also known as "Diamond Lil" and "Jersey Lil") fueled the popularity of large elaborate hats and the hatpins that were needed to hold them in place.

Early hat-holding pins were simple white or black beads on the end of a pin, but over time they grew longer and more elaborate. Hatpins grew so long legislation was passed in the 20th century limiting their length and classifying them as possible weapons.

The mass produced white or black bead on a pin was the basic 'working girl' hatpin, but many hatpins were made by jewelers of brass, copper, sterling silver, gold, or gold or silver wash. Other materials included Carnival glass, rhinestones, hand brown molded glass, micro mosaic, or hand-painted or transferred porcelain like the Japanese Satsuma. There were also hatpins made with ivory, emeralds, stone, amber, tortoise shell, jet, celluloid and other plastics, mother of pearl and coral.

Hatpin length reached its height in 1908 when some of them were 10 to 12 inches long. But in 1909 a bill was introduced in the Arkansas legislature which copied an Illinois law limiting the length of pins to 9 inches or making ladies take out permits to possess longer ones. The pins were considered deadly weapons, and if women wanted to wear them in public they had to trim their hatpins to a shorter length.

Key hatpin manufacturers included Unger Brothers, Lincoln, William Kerr, Alvin Manufacturing, R. Blackington and Company, Day and Clarke, and Sterling Company. Notable hatpin designers included Charles Horner, Louis Tiffany, Alvin Manufacturing, William Codman, James T. Wooley, Barton Jenks and George Gebelein.

"Before you see Art Deco in architecture, furniture or appliances, in the late 1920s early 1930s, the hatpin era had come and gone," says Jodi Lenocker, former president of the American Hatpin Society. "But there were Art Deco hatpins because the jewelers were incorporating what was changing in art. I have hatpins that

Cut glass sparkled with bright bids at Woody auction

BY BARBARA MILLER BEEM

DOUGLASS, Kan. – The small rural Kansas community of Douglass (population 1,700) once again became the center of the universe for cut glass collectors, as 360 lots of exquisite examples were offered at Woody Auction’s May 18 sale. And if there was ever any doubt that fine antiques still command premium prices, consider the fact that 29 of those lots sold for $1,000 or more.

At the end of the day, it was a pedestal crescent vase in the Diana pattern, signed “Libbey,” that topped all other sales. “Very fresh to the market” from a private Colorado collection, it was described as “one of the rarest forms in all of American Brilliant Cut Glass.” Even with two shallow interior rim chips, it sold for $19,000.

Of special note at the sale was an “extremely rare” amberina American Brilliant Cut Glass tankard, fully cut in the Russian pattern. It was made by the New England Glass Company (later the Libbey Glass Company) in 1883, the year in which William Libbey died. Bearing a “perfect” handle, the piece showed no damage. Engraved “D & B” below the handle, this tankard is believed to have been the one that was on display in 1968 at the Toledo Museum of Glass. A highlight of the late David Fuchshuber’s collection, it was “the finest amberina piece Woody Auction has ever offered for sale.” It brought $15,000.

The sale was not without surprises. Far exceeding its pre-sale estimate of $1,000 to $2,000 was an American Brilliant Cut Glass wine stem, turquoise cut to clear, in the Croesus pattern by J. Hoare. From a Pennsylvania collection, it made $6,000.

Other standouts at the sale included an American Brilliant Cut Glass kerosene lamp, Diamond and Button pattern, with an “elaborate” silverplate Pegasus lamp base. Attributed to Mt.

Some reproductions still showing up at JFK museum

Thanks to the many readers of AntiqueWeek for their emails regarding my recent column about unmarked reproduction and fantasy political campaign items being sold at the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library and Museum in Boston.

During a business trip to Boston, I took the opportunity to visit this fine museum and do a little souvenir shopping at the same time. Unfortunately, I found a number of items that were being sold in violation of the Hobby Protection Act which was passed by Congress in 1973 and more recently updated. While language of the law has been updated and tweaked several times over the past 50 years, the intent and spirit of the act remains the same...if you want to produce and sell fake or reproduction political (and other) items, they must be marked as such.

While a recent review of the website of the gift shop for the JFK Museum shows they no longer have perhaps the most troublesome of the reproduction items listed that I found there last year (the PT-109 tie clasps and lapel pins) there are still many items for sale that fly against the law including an autograph model writing pen, and Students for Kennedy picture buttons, key-chain, stickers, t-shirts and more.

I’m sure that most of these items will not fool many collectors into thinking they are old, but it is disappointing that the museum is not taking the step of removing all items for sale that are in violation of the law.

A peek at some recent Political Americana auction highlights: Heritage Auctions of Dallas, Tex-

Washington Glass, and from the Fuchshuber estate, it sold for $9,000. Also offered from that estate was an amethyst cut to clear pedestal decanter with a sterling silver double spout. Attributed to Stevens & Williams, it sold for $7,500.

Two other decanters that commanded high prices were from the estate of collectors Jean and Ralph Borelli. One, an amethyst cut to vaseline decanter, pattern #HF303 by Val St. Lambert, was dated from the early 20th century. This piece was in the shape of the Eiffel Tower and made $4,750. The other decanter, flask shaped and amethyst cut to clear, attributed to Stevens & Williams, was hammered down at $3,750.

An example representing “one of the greatest patterns” of the genre was an Aztec bowl signed “Libbey.” From a private collection in Missouri, it was, according to the auctioneer, “an incredible example.” It made $3,250.

Selling for a handsome price was a two-part punchbowl made by Meriden, an “outstanding” example of “one of the most recognizable patterns of the American Brilliant Cut Glass period,” that being Alhambra (also known as Greek Key). Having been in the same Massachusetts family for more than 60 years, it brought $3,000.

For bidders, a “rare opportunity” came with the offering of a late 19th-century palace floor clock, attributed to Baccarat. Standing nearly 4 feet tall, the key-wound timepiece featured a diamond cut body and clock case face, accented with gilt metal fittings. Despite some small chips, the clock was “overall in very good condition.” It is now chiming in a new home, thanks to a winning bid of $2,500. Also selling for $2,500 was a flower center featuring a hobstar and miter motif; a substantial piece, it weighed more than 17 pounds.

Woody Auction specializes in Victorian and pre-1920s antiques, including art glass and carnival glass, as well as porcelain and sterling silver, according to Jason Woody, who, with his wife Melinda, co-owns the company. Having been in his family for more than 75 years, Woody Auction is located southeast of Wichita and is regarded as “the worldwide leader in cut glass auctions.”

“Our cut glass bidders are extremely knowledgeable on the antique genre of American brilliant period cut glass, as well as European brilliant period cut glass,” Woody said. “The market is continuing to grow,” he said, adding that “we are experiencing approximately 15 new bidders every auction weekend.”

By the numbers, Woody noted that 541 bidders participated in this sale, with 497 bidding online at LiveAuctioneers. Six bidders participated on the phone, and 13 left absentee bids. Twenty-five in-person bidders traveled from Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Colorado, as well as Texas, Indiana, and, of course, Kansas, to the auction house’s modern facilities, with amenities that include a kitchen that serves breakfast and lunch.

Looking ahead, Woody Auction’s first in-person auction of the fall season will be an August 24 sale of furniture and art glass items. The next cut glass weekend is slated for Sept. 6 (online only) and Sept. 7 (in-person). For more information, go to woodyauction.com.

Finally, the big dog on the block this time around was a William Jennings Bryan 1900-dated Silver Ingot by Gorham Silversmiths. One side read: “16 to 1” in high-relief and “900 fine Good Enough For Our Fathers Good Enough For Us” incised along with eagle logo most collectable of collectibles. Crazy as it sounds, I think there might still be hope for both of them. On the subject of stamps, I doubt that few young people can be convinced to spend their evenings with a magnifying glass in hand, looking for flaws in rare examples. Nor would they be interested in filling in those pre-printed albums with spaces for stamps from around the world. On the other hand, if a visit to the National Postal Museum in Washington, D.C., is not in your summer plans, follow their curators' suggestion: Encourage the prospective collector to pick an appealing subject. Think cats or dogs, flags or artwork – you get the idea. Then purchase, for just a few dollars, a bag of mixed stamps, largely of little monetary value. Let the games begin!

As for coins, why not challenge a novice coin collector by beginning with Indian Head pennies? Buy one of those blue Warman's coin folders for less than $10. Then begin the treasure hunt with a raid on the piggy bank. Next stop, a bank, where you can get rolls of coins for even money, 50 pennies for 50 cents. Hope that the new collector hits it lucky the first time out. And while you're at it, slip in a history lesson on Honest Abe.

Postcards are another inexpensive gateway to a lifetime of collecting. They're easily found, as most antique malls have at least one postcard dealer. Except for choice examples, postcards need not be expensive, especially if they are unsorted (which is a good thing, as it keeps the young collector busy for a while, sifting through the inventory). Although young'uns should be taught to handle all items for sale with care, postcards are pretty durable. As for what to collect, think of a theme, again, cats, dogs, horses, or a favorite vacation spot. A side benefit might be a lesson in how to read messages written in cursive (or at least a reminder of why this is still an important skill).

Books. Whereas I (and many of my friends) cultivated a love of mystery books at a young age, thanks to Nancy Drew and the Hardy Boys, these titles have not stood the test of time. My advice is to hold on to your memories and keep these books to yourself (including Trixie Belden) when trying to inspire a new reader. On the other hand, think about vintage books that might speak to a kiddo's interest. For instance, older books about vintage automobiles might appeal to the budding car enthusiast, while the aspiring chef might appreciate yesteryear's cookbooks. Comic books are certainly collectable, but it's not a good idea to overhandle (and read) those that are of value. With that in mind, don't overlook relatively inexpensive books that are collections of bygone comic strips, including "Pogo," "Peanuts," and "Calvin and Hobbes."

OK, time for some easier "sells." Where as rare vinyl records might not be in the budget, there are plenty that are affordable, ones that everyone once owned (think Carole King's "Tapestry" and Fleetwood Mac's "Rumours"). Ditto old movies. Certain unopened VHS tapes are collectable (read: valuable), and a working VCR is not in everyone's home. But I'll bet you have a DVD player, and if so, instead of hoping your favorites can be streamed, hie thee to the thrift store, where classics can be yours (and your young collector's) for a dollar or two.

And finally, there are cool old toys. And geegaws that can be used for craft projects. And. . .let me know what I'm missing.

Hatpin Collections

represent Arts and Crafts, hand hammered out of brass, lots of workmanship. Most of mine are Art Nouveau though, that's my favorite."

Lenocker says Arts and Crafts hatpins are a little cleaner with the hand hammered look, adding that Arts and Crafts celebrated individual craftsmanship and design, so it rejected some of the Victorian mass-production and the designs were more simplistic and used less precious metals.

"They used brass and silver that showed hammer marks, and the stones used were a lighter color," she said. "Art Nouveau was associated with nature, femininity and fertility. Most Art Nouveau hatpins were made of silver, sterling or wash. They have the free flowing, whiplash lines that suggest movement, passion, vitality and youthful vigor."

Hatpins made out of precious metals or jewels are also very sought after, Lenocker says. Amethyst and pearls are popular.

"It all depends on the collector," Lenocker said. "Charles Horner hatpins enjoy a large following in both America and England, so those are always collectible. "Hallmarked hatpins are also very collectible. There are also compact hatpins that have a mirror and a powder puff attached."

Hatpins were also considered the perfect gift. "When giving a sweetheart jewelry, it was frowned upon to give her earrings, a necklace, or a bracelet, but you could give her a presentation box set of hatpins," Lenocker said. "The box was velvet lined with a satin top and sometimes the store makers' name was on the satin and the hatpins were on swivels so they would lay flat and all the jewelry in the box was in fine art and enamel."

After World War I hatpins began to fall out of favor as clothing styles changed.

"I typically find them from other collectors, dealers and occasionally on eBay," Lenocker said. "I prefer to see hatpins before I buy them. Every other year there's been a convention of hatpin collectors on the East Coast. I first look at the overall appearance, does the head fit the pin, and does it look like a hatpin of that era. I look at the finding and the way it's attached to the pin. I also look at the condition of the stem, is it well made and preserved."

As with many collectibles there are reproductions and fakes in the market. "The real challenge is being aware of fakes," she said. "Fakes are a major thing in collecting hatpins. Going to meetings and going to shows and seeing a lot of hatpins and being educated by fellow collectors is the best way to learn how to deal with fakes."

Above: This Victorian floral mount hatpin with bezel-set red glass rhinestones measures 1½ inches long. The pin shank is short, measuring just 3¾ inches. (photo submitted)

Though many collectors search the Internet for references to vintage hat pins, Lenocker reaches to what she calls the "Bible" of hatpin research: The Collectors Encyclopedia of Hatpins and Hatpin Holders by Lillian Baker.

"Hatpins are really a good representative sample of the jewelry of the late Victorian and early Edwardian age, and anyone who enjoys jewelry of that period would really enjoy collecting hatpins," Lenocker said. "It's a way of saving that little piece of history for posterity."

Right: The popularity of the hatpin waned by the end of the 1930s, but before doing so manufacturers made them more elaborate by using colorful plastics. (photo submitted)
