Pint-size technology magazines are still page-turners

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

They measured just a little over 6 by 9 inches, but their pages packed a wallop of information. Small-footprint magazines like Popular Mechanics, Popular Science, and Mechanix Illustrated informed and inspired multiple generations of American readers.

These small periodicals, centered on DIY, science, and technology, were a favorite on coffee tables for a primarily male audience. Often called “digest” or “pocket-sized” because of their compact format, they were created for portability and cost-efficiency. Like mass-market paperbacks and other small publications like Reader’s Digest, their size helped keep prices low and fueled their popularity.

Though many of these started with intellectual goals, most broadened their scope to attract a general readership eager to learn about modern advancements. Featuring everything from aviation and electronics to automotive and home repair, they made science and technology both engaging and accessible to American consumers.

Popular Mechanics is arguably the most recognizable small-size journal in history. Founded in Chicago in 1902—just before the Wright Brothers made their first flight—it arrived at a pivotal moment when technological innovations like automobiles and motion pictures were transforming society. Under the leadership of Henry Haven Windsor, a former newspaper journalist and editor, the aim was to make complex scientific and mechanical topics understandable to the average person. Windsor’s vision was simple: to explain how the world worked using clear language, illustrations, and photos. For years, the masthead carried the tagline, “Written so you can understand it,” catering to an audience eager to learn about emerging technologies.

Popular Mechanics’ first issue hit the newsstands in January 1902 at a modest cover price of five cents. Originally a weekly, it switched to a monthly format that September. Initially, Windsor wrote every article, impressively filling copies that, by 1904, had grown to 100 pages. Eventually, articles began appearing by notable figures like Guglielmo Marconi, Thomas Edison, and even US President Teddy Roosevelt. By the 1910s, Popular Mechanics was recognized for its small footprint, eye-catching full-color covers, and detailed illustrations that taught everything from building a radio to repointing brickwork — a format that continued until the mid-1970s.

Above: By 1978, Popular Electronics had shifted to the 8.5 by 11-inch format and began focusing on personal computers.

In contrast, Popular Science has a slightly different history. It can trace its origins to The Popular Science Monthly, which was founded in May 1872 by American science writer Edward L. Youmans. Youmans’ goal was to create a platform that made scientific knowledge accessible to an educated audience. Over time, it became a space where some of the greatest minds of the era, including Charles Darwin, John Dewey, and Louis Pasteur, could share their groundbreaking ideas with the learned public.

That original mission of presenting complex scientific ideas to an educated audience had inadvertently limited its appeal. By 1915, readership was in decline and the publisher was in financial trouble. After several editorial changes, a new version — Popular Science — emerged, featuring short, easy-to-read articles aimed at hobbyists who wanted to learn about the world of science and technology. Like Popular Mechanics, later volumes featured alluring cover design and were filled with ample illustration. Circulation for the newly revamped design doubled in its first year.

Popular Science also began featuring articles on captivating topics like rocket science and space exploration.

However, that material often shifted away from purely scientific reporting, leaning toward futuristic ideas that many times had a “Buck Rogers” feel, which attracted some criticism.

Mechanix Illustrated debuted 20 years after both Popular Mechanics and Popular Science. It was founded in 1928 by American publisher Fawcett Publications to compete against those established titles. Right from the start, it emphasized content on autos, aircraft, and watercraft along with home project topics like remodeling to woodworking. Monthly vehicle road tests, which ran from the 1940s through the 1970s, became especially popular. They were also often filled with visionary vehicles like automotive-aircraft hybrids and personal hovercraft.

In the same era, a wave of similar magazines followed the lead of their predecessors. Electronics Illustrated (1958) and Popular Electronics (1954) focused on electrical and electronic projects, while Popular Homecraft (1928) was a DIY-centered journal. Science Digest (1937) set itself apart from Popular Science by focusing on lay audiences from the outset. Along the way, many of these issued focused,

History and antique shopping meet in Williamsburg

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Few places in America draw history enthusiasts quite like Williamsburg. Once the capital of the Virginia colony, it played a key role in the events leading to the American Revolution. Today, Williamsburg stands as the nation's largest living history museum, drawing thousands of visitors each year. There, you can step back into the 18th century, where restored buildings, costumed interpreters, and skilled craftspeople bring colonial life to vivid reality, letting you experience the rich heritage of early America.

You'd think a place as historic as Williamsburg would be packed with antique shops featuring items from the colonial and early American eras. It once was, but as tastes shifted away from traditional antiques to favoring 20th-century styles, the historic district no longer leads the antique scene. These days, you have to travel slightly west of the historic area to the nearby villages of Lightfoot, Norge, and Toano to get an antique fix. There, you will find a nice handful of antique malls and shops perfect for days of shopping.

Despite shifts in trends, Williamsburg's antique scene remains strong. These nearby antique stores have adapted by diversifying their offerings, showcasing curated pieces that appeal to both traditional collectors and those with more modern tastes. Interestingly, the market for traditional antiques is still robust, driven by area retirees with formal tastes and simultaneously fed by others who are downsizing their homes. It's worth mentioning that Southern School antiques and decorative items are prevalent — a trend that began with the Williamsburg Antiques Forum in 1949 and a subsequent event in 1952 that showcased Tidewater and Southern furniture. Collectors found the groove at the Columbus Record & Music Memorabilia Show

Columbus, Ohio — On Saturday, April 14, Central Ohio welcomed the return of the long-running Columbus Record & Music Memorabilia Show, hosted by local antiques vendor Colleen's Collectibles. Approaching its 50th anniversary, the event draws collectors and audiophiles to shop a vast selection of vintage records, tapes, and music memorabilia. Past shows have even featured vintage turntables and stereo equipment.

Founders Colleen and Gus Sarios met in a record shop in 1976 while browsing Beatles albums, and quickly discovered a mutual passion for music and collecting. That connection led to years of traveling through small towns, hunting for pop culture memorabilia and vintage recordings. "We used to 'pick' old mom and pop stores, little shops and drug stores...that's how we got our start," Colleen explained.

Over time, their collecting got ahead of them. "We bought so much stuff!" Gus said. "When we left New York, we thought we should do a record show." They began by setting up tables at existing events, testing the waters, and meeting fellow collectors. In 1978, joined by a couple of friends, they launched their first record chandise, there's plenty to pursue.

To discover Williamsburg's antique hub, head west along US Route 60 (Richmond Road). This stretch is home to an enclave of antique malls and shops offering everything from 18th-century furniture to post-war collectibles. Here are the places to track down:

Williamsburg Antique Mall (500 Lightfoot Road) - Approximately 5 miles west of the historic district, the first location is the Williamsburg Antique Mall in Lightfoot, about a mile off of Richmond Road. This 45,000 antique mall has been around for over 25 years. Inside, you'll find 300-400 dealers, many from out of state. The booths and showcases are filled with traditional antiques from the 19th (and sometimes even 18th) century alongside good vintage pieces from more modern eras. You'll find an eclectic array including Civil War and other militaria, ceramics, coins, furniture, nautical and railroad artifacts, old tools, pewter, and silver. There's a small cafe featuring snack fare, and the mall is pet-friendly.

American Vintage Company (312 Lightfoot Road) - In the shopping center next to the Williamsburg Antique Mall is American Vintage Company, one of the more unusual antique shops you might ever encounter. It offers a great blend of primitives, old industrial pieces, tools, and elaborate commercial cabinetry from old stores and places of business. But, it's the 500+ live-edge wood slabs and other pieces of wood, perfect for projects, that are the real eye-opener.

Charlie's Antiques (6500 Richmond Road) - About a block further west along Richmond Road from the previous two is Charlie's Antiques. Charlie and his wife Susan are holdovers from the halcyon days of Williamsburg's antique scene and maintain a store filled with top-grade antiques and sculpture. Heavy on furniture, rooms are filled with great Southern antiques, along with pieces from New England, Europe, and Asia. Some items predate the founding of the United States. A bit further down Richmond Road (7691), Charlie also operates a "rock yard" filled with geological specimens from around the world, more statuary, and "boneyard" pieces perfect for landscaping.

Lucky Junque (7787 Richmond Road) - Located on the opposite side of Richmond Road in Toano, Lucky Junque is a must-visit, housed in an old farmhouse (look for the giant rocking chair outside!). Inside the 2,500-square-foot space, you'll find a variety of antiques, furniture, home decor, and lighting.

Left: American Vintage Company specializes in live-edge and other pieces of craft wood perfect for furniture making or home remodeling projects.

Above: Aside from craft wood, American Vintage Company also carries exceptional commercial antiques like this rotating hardware cabinet ($2,295)

Outside, a 7,000-square-foot barn offers more antiques, collectibles, and "junk" perfect for your next project.

Antiques at the Old Store (7421 Richmond Road) - Within a half-mile of Lucky Junque is this shop operating from an original circa 1907 sundries store. They specialize in the restoration and sale of traditional antiques, particularly early 19th-century furniture. Here, you will find pieces like plantation desks, tavern tables, and Windsor chairs, along with pewter and wrought iron accessories to round out the decor.

Lightfoot Antique Mall and Country General Store (6623 Richmond Road) - About a mile east, this family-owned business has been a staple for over 20 years, relocating to its current spot in 2018. Home to 30 vendors, it offers everything from vintage kitchenware to nautical antiques. In addition to the store's diverse selection, you can visit their outdoor flea market on weekends (weather permitting).

While this small cluster of shops doesn't rival Williamsburg's antiquing heydays, antique shopping in Williamsburg is still a wonderful experience. Any visit to Williamsburg inspires being connected to the past, and it's a natural step to go from strolling Williamsburg's colonial streets to hunting for a piece of history at these nearby stores.

That original show spanned two days with just Colleen, Gus, and the small cadre of friends handling everything. Around 1980, they added a shop in Columbus' Oakland Park, followed by another location in the Liberty Street Antique Mall in nearby Powell Ohio.

The show is now a one-day affair held in the Fraternal Order of Eagles club in northeast Columbus. Now in its third venue, the show has grown significantly, hosting 40+ dealers with more than 100 tables. The event has become a local favorite, with lines often stretching outside before the doors open as collectors eagerly await entry.

Once inside, shoppers' enthusiasm becomes palpable as they hit the crates of vinyl dominating the scene. Collectors of all tastes found their corner — whether a fan of jazz, classic rock, Motown, or 80s hair bands. Bargain bins offered finds for $1-$5, while rare or autographed albums sometimes fetched prices in the hundreds. Many in good condition and even sealed records were available for $10-$20, making it easy to start or expand a collection.

Many sellers had specialties. Two spotlighted Motown, R&B, and Soul, while another emphasized 1980s metal bands. Others focused on 45s, CDs, 8-tracks, or cassettes rather than LPs. Mixed in were subspecialties like box sets, and even occasional stacks of VHS tapes and laser discs.

Many of the record sellers have been with the show for years. One was Phil Fraley, from Enon, Ohio near Dayton. He's been attending for almost a decade. Although it's just a hobby for him, you'd never guess it by his table setup. When asked what attendees were buying, he responded, "It's all over the place, but rock stuff mainly." Another long-time seller, Ron House from Columbus, has been doing shows for 15 years. When talking about the Columbus show, he underscored, "I love coming here!" He pointed out that the show draws an older crowd than others he attends - something echoed by other dealers. Because of that, he said "70s stuff, particularly rock and roll...and metal" sell best at this show.

Below: There were hundreds of rarely-seen specialty albums like this Gene Roddenberry "Inside Star Trek" recording priced at just $10.

Amid all the records and tapes, there were also dealers offering music and pop-culture memorabilia. From classic concert posters and band t-shirts to sheet music and musician action figures, plenty was available. Jenny Salisbury, owner of Cleveland Sleeves, was one of those sellers, offering authentic, licensed band t-shirts. Though she had been in business for over a decade, this was her first time at the Columbus Record Show. She was pleased with the strong sales, particularly all the transactions coming from fellow dealers eager to grab items before the crowds arrived.

The Columbus Record & Music Memorabilia Show is held five times a year, with the next events scheduled for June 14, August 9, and October 11. Admission is $5, and parking is free. Food is available onsite.

The event is held at the Fraternal Order of Eagles Club, 3800 Westerville Road, Columbus, Ohio. For more information: colleenscollect@aol.com or 614-261-1585

Herstal machine gun will take aim at high bids during Morphy event

DENVER, Pa. – While collecting elite firearms and militaria has captivated crowned heads, presidents and historians for centuries, it is an interest that knows no social or national boundaries. Practically everywhere on Earth, there are passionate firearms enthusiasts who enjoy studying and displaying their prized acquisitions, especially those associated with immortal figures, legendary battles or other world-changing events of the past. The next opportunity collectors will have to bid on premier examples of military, civilian and sporting firearms comes on May 13-15 at Morphy's flagship gallery in Pennsylvania.

The 1,218-lot auction selection contains many once-in-a-lifetime buying opportunities, starting with rare NFA guns, which are fully transferable upon receipt of BATF approval. "As each scarce NFA gun passes into private hands, it narrows the field, leaving even fewer that qualify for individual purchase," said Dan Morphy, founder and president of Morphy Auctions. "That's why, over the last several years, we've seen such incredible competition for the NFA guns in our sales, not to mention consistently higher prices. Many collectors view them as investments."

Morphy singled out one NFA gun, in particular, that he thinks might end up being the top lot of the entire May 13-15 auction: a Fabrique Nationale (Herstal) U.S. M240B machine gun. Chambered in .308, it is one of very few specimens of its type that would be fully transferable to an individual owner. In near-mint condition, retaining its original tripod and even its original shipping box, this gun has never been fired since leaving the factory, per its current owner. It is marked on the left side of the receiver U.S. M240 / 11825980 / MACHINE GUN

7.62MM, followed by its serial number, contract number and National Stock Number. Described by Morphy as "a tremendous example that would be all but impossible to upgrade," it is expected to sell in the vicinity of $350,000-$600,000.

A very rare and desirable Japanese Type 5 Garand semi-automatic rifle with the serial number 13 is one of approximately 125 that were assembled in Japan as experimental firearms at the midpoint of World War II, starting in 1944. This model, an adaptation of the American Garand, has standard Japanese 7.7mm chambering. It comes to auction with a 1946 capture certificate showing its recipient to be Colonel Walter D Buie, plus a shipping box addressed to (Major) Buie at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; and his wife in North Carolina. An outstanding and well-documented World War II rarity, it is offered with a $60,000-$75,000 estimate.

Several exceptional highlights lead the arsenal of 19th-century military and Old West arms. The earliest of the featured lots is an Isaiah Jennings 1821 patent 5-shot .44 smoothbore repeating flintlock Kentucky pistol built by JM Caswell. A noted gunsmith based in upstate New York, Caswell was especially well known for his half-stock Kentucky rifles. His Kentucky pistol was actually a refinement of an earlier Revolutionary War-era flintlock pistol created by Belton and represents one of the earliest of American repeating-arms designs. It was produced in limited numbers for martial trials, and although it was never placed in full military service, its features blazed a trail for the later adoption of repeating arms by American forces. One of its important features is an auto-primer that would dispense a charge of powder into the pan each time the weapon was cocked.

A very rare and fine Martial Colt Paterson Model 1839 percussion revolving rifle, .525 smoothbore, was manufactured sometime between 1838 and 1841. It was one of 360 specimens purchased by the US War Department from a total production run of only 950 guns. The cylinder is roll-die-engraved by WL Ormsby with three vignettes that include a lion-hunting motif and early naval-engagement scenes. The name Paterson, with 2 t's (correct for this model), appears on the cylinder, while the stock is correctly marked WAT, for William Anderson Thornton, within an oval US inspection cartouche. A fine historical model from a production run with a very low survival rate, it displays matching numbers and is entered with a $60,000-$100,000 estimate.

A treasure of the Civil War era, a superb cased set of Colts consists of an 1860 fluted Army Revolver and an 1862 Police Revolver. The set was originally a factory presentation to Colonel Henry Craig, US Army Chief of Ordnance. It will convey to its new owner with a copy of a 2019 factory letter confirming shipment on Feb. 25, 1861 to Major W.M.B. Hartley with the special notations: "To Col. Craig, U.S.A. Commanding Ordnance Corps From Colt's P.F.A. Mfg. Co." and "Furnished with a shoulder stock, a powder flask, 60 cartridges, and 500 belt caps."

Field action will heat up with the introduction of a superlative Holland & Holland Royal .375 flanged Magnum Double Rifle that, according to the Donald Dallas reference book Holland & Holland: The Royal Gunmaker, was made between 1910 and 1922. Its chopper lump barrels are fitted with a bead front sight on a stippled spearpoint ramp island relieved on its sides for a sight hood. Additionally, it has an express rear sight with two leaves, one standing regulated for 50/200 yards, the other folding for 300 yards. Both have silver express lines and are screwed to a spearpoint quarter rib with anti-glare matting. The gun is engraved with near-full coverage of the classic Holland & Holland Royal scroll, with vignettes for the company name. Recoil shields are embellished with bouquets of flowers and borders with rope and beadwork, and they are signed on the bottom The Royal Hammerless. Matching serial numbers and a trademark appear on the barrels' undersides. Mechanically fine with excellent action and stocks, the rifle is graded excellent in a VG relined case with accessories. Holland & Holland aficionados would recognize this as a very rare gun in full-bore magnum chambering, more than worthy of its $45,000-$65,000 estimate.

Planning a trip? Event Finder can help you locate auctions and shows. All events listed under the Event Finder heading are advertised in this issue of AntiqueWeek. Events are listed by state, then by town with a brief description of the event, the opening date and finally the page number where the ad can be located.

Event Finder is only for advertised events. Auctioneers and show managers who want to be listed in our free calendar listings may continue to do so. Those free listings will be contained in the Auction or Show calendar sections.

While we have taken great care in compiling the information shown here, we strongly urge you to call the auctioneer or show manager listed for the event in case of cancellations or postponements. We also encourage auctioneers and show managers to contact us with any changes to their schedule. AntiqueWeek is not responsible for errors or omissions.

Calendars can also be searched online at www.antiqueweek.com
For advertising information please call 800-876-5133 ext. 133 or e-mail advertising@antiqueweek.com

Waiting for that 'pop' when Jack springs out of the box

LARRY LEMASTERS

For collectors, "Pop Goes the Weasel" is much more than a nursery rhyme; it is the lively tune that plays when a Jack-in-the-Box handle is turned. The traditional song goes back some 150 years; however, the meaning of the words may go back several centuries beyond that.

All around the Mulberry Bush,
The monkey chased the weasel.
The monkey stopped to pull up his sock,
Pop! Goes the weasel.

Half a pound of tuppenny rice,
Half a pound of treacle.
Mix it up and make it nice,
Pop goes the weasel.

Some linguists believe that "weasel" actually refers to King James I and that "rice" and "treacle" are slang terms for potassium nitrate and charcoal. If this is true, then the song probably refers to the Gunpowder Plot of 1605 when Sir Robert Catesby attempted to assassinate James I and blow up the House of Lords.

JERRY A. WILCOX OBITUARY

Jerry A. Wilcox, owner of Marathon Auction Company, died at his home in Marathon, N.Y., on April 4 at the age of 80. Jerry was born on May 15, 1944, in Cortland, N.Y. His life was marked by his deep passion for antiques, which he pursued throughout his career as a longtime dealer and broad-spectrum collector. His expertise also led him to serve as an auctioneer, where he shared his love for unique finds with others. In addition to his professional accomplishments, Jerry dedicated his time to community service, notably as a board member for the 1890 House for several years. His contributions to the local cultural landscape will be remembered fondly by those who knew him. An alumnus of Marathon Central School, Jerry furthered his education by receiving a master's degree from New Paltz State University. This educational foundation supported his endeavors, both in business and in service to his community. Jerry is survived by his partner of 43 years, Thomas Carman, of Marathon, and his son, Sean Michael Wilcox, of Cortland. He is also survived by his brother, Larry Wilcox, of Marathon, as well as several grandchildren who brought him immense joy. Expressions of sympathy in memory of Jerry may be directed to the 1890 House Museum, 37 Tompkins Street, Cortland, NY 13045 or the Roswell Park Alliance Foundation, P.O. Box 631, Buffalo, NY 14240.

Above: Three Jack-in-the-Box toys from the Taft Museum of Art (Cincinnati, Ohio) toy display.

Other interpretations of the lyrics suggest the words "Pop Goes the Weasel" may mean a tailor's flat iron, a hatter's tool, a clock reel (used for spinning), a weaver's shuttle (which makes a popping sound when the loom is in use), a piece of silver plate, and that the term is Cockney rhyming slang for "coat," so it means to "pop" or pawn your coat to raise money to buy ale at the Eagle pub. The Eagle freehold pub existed then as a London music hall and now (since 1901) as a public drinking house, so the song may refer to selling one's coat to buy ale at the pub.

In the mid-1800s, the tune "Pop Goes the Weasel" was used for a lively children's game and a popular dance. The game was played like musical chairs since children would dance around chairs until the music stopped (at "Pop Goes the Weasel") and then rush to occupy a chair. The player who failed to sit in a chair was eliminated, and a chair was removed, reducing the number of chairs by one until there was only one weasel left.

Like most nursery rhymes, "Pop Goes the Weasel" has odd imagery, especially for children, but most of the early English nursery rhymes derived from actual, historical events, making it both fun and frustrating trying to decipher the rhymes meaning.

Collectors primarily know the tune Pop goes the Weasel because it is the tune used in a Jack-in-the-Box, a children's toy that is one of the oldest known children's toys that is still manufactured today. A Jack-in-the-Box is a spring-loaded toy that plays music, has a crank, and has a puppet inside the box. When the crank is turned, music is produced, traditionally "Pop Goes the Weasel." Toward the end of the song, where the lyric "POP" would go, a latch is released and a spring-loaded puppet is propelled out of the box. Traditionally, the puppet is a clown or jester; although, the original, historic puppet was a devil.

Most toy historians believe that the idea for a Jack-in-the-Box toy dates to 13th century England when Sir John Schorne, according to English folklore, cast the devil into one of his boots in order to protect the town of North Marston in Buckinghamshire from demonic possession. Drawings of Sir John often depict him holding a boot with a devil head popping out of it, so devils became popular puppets in Jack-in-the-Boxes.

The Nuremburg Toy Museum documents the earliest known Jack-in-the-Box was made by a German clock maker in the early 1500s as a gift for the son of a prince. This Jack-in-the-Box was a plain wooden box with a crank that played a simple tune. The "Jack" was a comical-looking devil with a "leering smile." Soon after this box was made, other rich noblemen requested Jack-in-the-Boxes for their children. And Jack-in-the-Boxes have never been out of production since.

The 1930s produced many highly sought after Jack-in-the-Boxes. These boxes were made of tin and were lithographed with images from nursery rhymes, Disney, or other popular cartoon characters.

Today, Fisher Price, Ideal, Mattel, and Hasbro are just a few of the companies still making Jack-in-the-Boxes. Collectors have recently begun seeking vintage Fisher Price Jack-in-the-Boxes, some of which are now 50 years old.

Jack-in-the-Boxes have remained popular children's toys for nearly 600 years. The Encyclopedia of American Folk Art credits "the element of surprise" for Jack-in-the-Boxes continued appeal. Children of all ages love to turn the crank, listen to "Pop Goes the Weasel" and anticipate the flutter of excitement when Jack or the Devil jumps out of his box, which is why, in any antique store, you will find adult children still playing with Jack-in-the-Boxes.

Gold Rush show will feature moon rocks

ROCHESTER, Minn. — Now in its 53rd year, the Gold Rush Antique Show and Flea Market will fill three halls and the lobby at Graham Park. The spring show will be held May 9-11 with a lineup of outstanding dealers from across the United States.

Items literally from out of this world will also be part of this year's event. Rocks and stones from both the moon and Mars will be displayed and offered for sale. Also there will be stones formed by various meteorite impacts. "All the stones from the Moon and Mars are all published, meaning they have been chemically analyzed and have been in research papers, scientific journals, magazines, doctoral thesis, etc.," show managers said.

Also on display will be a signed autographed photo of the Astronaut Neil Armstrong, the first man to walk on the Moon.

Show hours are Friday and Saturday 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday 8 a.m. to 2 p.m.

For more information visit www.townsendshows.com

Please report late delivery

AntiqueWeek strives to provide customers with the best delivery possible. Recently, many of our delivery areas have been experiencing late delivery of the paper. AntiqueWeek's late delivery staff has been working closely with USPS to ensure you receive your paper on time, every time. If your paper is not delivered by the issue date, please let us know.

These areas experienced multiple reports of late deliveries during the week of 03/25/25: Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania.

These States reported single reported of late delivery for the same week: Florida, Michigan, Texas.

Our staff members will continue to address the late delivery reports we receive. We are constantly striving to rectify the late delivery problem. Please call our customer care center at (800) 876-5133 or e-mail Kphipp@midcountrymedia.com or Skopp@midcountrymedia.com to report late delivery in your area.

Please, also contact USPS at 1-800-ASK-USPS or 1-800-275-8777

If you are experiencing consistent late delivery of all mail, we are encouraging you to reach out to your State Representatives to report the ongoing problems with late mail delivery in your area.

While we agree that the physical copy of the paper is the top priority, we do want to remind everyone that in the event your paper does not arrive by the issue date, the current issue is available to view on the website www.AntiqueWeek.com. The online issue is free to subscribers and totally keyword searchable. Thank you for your continued patience & support as we work through the issues with USPS.

If you enjoy AntiqueWeek you might also try our Farm World newspaper!

special editions with titles like Concrete and Masonry, Ultimate Toolbox, and Weekend Projects aimed squarely at the do-it-yourselfer.

During World War II, these tiny periodicals became a favorite among American G.I.s for their convenience and portability. Even after the war, their popularity continued, thanks in part to their classified advertising promoting job-training opportunities and a range of money-making schemes, from envelope stuffing to stock trading, which appealed to those seeking financial opportunities.

Pocket-size periodicals didn't remain exclusive to men, either. Recognizing the untapped potential of female readers, publishers also began targeting women in households, to both broaden their reach and break the stereotype that DIY was only for men. Digest-size magazines such as Homemaker and Practical Householder hit shelves, offering practical advice for women on everything from simple plumbing fixes to furniture refinishing.

By the mid-1970s, the digest-size format started to lose its appeal, and the standard 8.5 by 11-inch size took over. This change signaled the end of an era, with Popular Mechanics and Popular Science both transitioning in 1975. Mechanix Illustrated, however, held on longer, continuing with the small footprint until the 1990s.

During the late 1970s and into the 1980s, Popular Mechanics, Popular Science, and Popular Electronics devoted much of their content to the rise of consumer electronics, particularly personal computers. By the 1990s, as they ventured further into high-tech topics, their publishers found themselves competing with those dedicated solely to computers. At the same time, many of these once DIY and science-focused journals had changed hands and had drifted from their original missions. Popular Mechanics, for instance, was bought by Hearst Publications in the 1960s, and by the end of the century, it had become more speculative and politically charged. It now publishes only bimonthly. Popular Science changed hands multiple times, being owned by Times Mirror, Tribune, and Time-Warner, and underwent a revamp in 2014 to include new topics like environmental science. In 2021, it switched to a digital-only format. Meanwhile, Mechanix Illustrated merged with This Old House in 2021, which shuttered in 2024.

Although these magazines have evolved, the older editions still attract a dedicated group of collectors. For most, collecting these vintage publications is more about personal enjoyment than financial gain. They have undeniable charm, yet remain very affordable. Most issues are priced under $5, and they're often available in bulk at great prices. It's rare to see them go for over $10, except in cases of pre-1930s editions, limited foreign-language runs like the Spanish Mecanica Popular (1947-2003), or issues in pristine condition, particularly if sought by collectors looking to complete their sets.

Ultimately, old journals such as Popular Mechanics and Popular Science hold a unique nostalgic value. While they may not fetch high resale prices, they provide an affordable way to collect the past while offering a fascinating glimpse into the inventive mindset of previous generations. Keep an eye out at yard sales and flea markets, where these relics may turn

QUICK CONTACTS FROM WET NEGATIVES

For the photography hobbyist who wants contact prints in a hurry, here is an easy way of producing them without having to wait until processed negatives are dry. An enlarger and a ferrotype plate are the only pieces of darkroom equipment needed to do this. Begin by immersing an unexposed sheet of 8 x 10-in. enlarging paper in water for a few minutes. Then, allow it to drain while cutting the film into strips of four frames. Place the paper, emulsion side up, on the ferrotype plate and arrange the negative strips on top, emulsion side down. Wipe lightly with a damp sponge to flatten the negatives. Then expose the paper in the same manner as when using a contact printer. After exposure, immerse the negatives and paper in water to separate them, as the emulsion surfaces tend to adhere to each other.—G. Robert Smith
