Moss lamps did a lot more than just light up a room

BY DONALD-BRIAN JOHNSON

Once seen, Moss lamps are rarely forgotten. These Plexiglas marvels first cast their unique glow on households of the 1950s, and have delighted collectors ever since. Perhaps that's because there's such a variety to choose from. Many Moss lamps come equipped with spinning figurines and spun glass shades. Others incorporate clocks, radios, music boxes, fountains, and even intercoms into their design. For the truly adventurous, there are Moss coffee tables, wall plaques, cigarette lighters, bars and aquariums. Each lights up, each uses Plexiglas as its primary material — and each is, as a 1958 Moss ad boasted, “truly a conversation piece.”

In 1937, Gerald “Gerry” Moss founded San Francisco’s Moss Manufacturing Company, following experience as a lamp wholesaler. When the wholesale building burnt down, Moss had two options: go into manufacturing, or go out of business. He chose the former.

The first Moss lamps were traditional ones, metal-stemmed with fabric shades. Then, World War II intervened. With steel at a premium, luxuries such as metal lamps were given low priority. Forced to come up with a new raw material for the company’s products, Gerry Moss turned to staff designer Duke Smith. Smith had the answer: Plexiglas.

Dubbed “plastic” in the Moss literature, Plexiglas was an acrylic product developed in 1934 by the Rohm & Haas company. For Moss Manufacturing, Plexiglas had several points in its favor: it was inexpensive, no other company was using it. . .and most importantly, Plexiglas was not rationed. Lamp production at Moss could continue, although now with an entirely new focus.

Above: Black unglazed figurines with gold luster trim by Johanna add drama to #XT 835. The artificial flowers are the originals provided with the table lamps.

As quickly as Plexiglas replaced metal, modern lamp stylings at Moss replaced traditional ones. Since Plexiglas could be cut and assembled in ways metal could not, Duke Smith took full advantage of this adaptability. In his work, angled plexi pieces not only form the lamp bodies, but also jut out in every direction imaginable. Smith’s designs are excitingly original — but there was more to come.

Encouraged by postwar sales of Plexiglas lamps, Gerry Moss knew that all his company needed for even greater success was a driving force, capable of working with, and inspiring, staff designers. What better choice than his wife, the energetic and creative Thelma Moss? By 1950, Mrs. Moss was already an established entrepreneur, owning sixteen Mode O’Day women’s wear shops throughout California.

Contemporaries recall Thelma Moss as a dynamo. Noted one, “her mind could go in one hundred different directions at the same time.” Working closely with talented designers Duke Smith, and later John Disney, Mrs. Moss let her imagination run rampant — and what Thelma imagined, her designers brought to life.

As stylish and colorful as her lamps, Thelma Moss made the most of every new opportunity. Noting the attention attracted when she made Moss factory rounds accompanied by her poodle Terry, she soon incorporated him (decked out in horn-rimmed glasses) into company promotional photos. When a plexi champagne fountain, designed for the 1956 wedding of her daughter, proved a hit, fountain lamps quickly joined the Moss line.

Moss lamps were sold primarily through furniture dealers, with new models introduced at each season’s market shows. Dealers would order from a prototype, with actual production based on the number of orders placed. If a particular model attracted no orders, it was either revamped for a future show, or sold as “one-of-a-kind.”

Johnson gasoline sign winged its way to $13,000 at auction

BY SUSAN EMERSON NUTTER

PEOTONE, Ill. — It doesn't get much better than the Check the Oil Promotions, LLC's Fall Peotone Gas, Oil, & Advertising Auction held in conjunction with their Fall Peotone Show at the Will County Fairgrounds in Peotone. When it comes to all things having to do with advertising in this collecting category, Check the Oil has been the go-to organization where collectors are concerned whether it is finding out information about an item or actually finding and acquiring some gas or oil rarity.

The Oct. 17 event included close to 600 lots of everything from gas pump and gas globes; to neon signs and neon clocks, to oil cans, countertop displays – you name it.

Leading the day was a Johnson winged 70 gasoline die-cut identification sign. Double-sided and comprised of paint on tin, this 37.5 inch by 48 inch rarity was taken to $13,000. Prices listed are hammer prices. This sign was not in the best of condition with paint flaking and edge bends, but since it is so difficult to find, condition was not a big issue.

In contrast, a painted tin sign in a frame and wearing its original shipping label on the back; with just some minor scratches to the field but being a more common example - "Osceola Gasoline Ahead" with a Native American chief graphic - sold for $6,000. It measured 49 inches by 96 inches. Identical in shape, size, and color to the above but with the words "Zephyr Gasoline Ahead" and the Zephyr logo, this example made $3,200.

Porcelain signage pieces are always popular with oil and gas collectors. The top lot in this category was the 71.5 inch in diameter "Old Dutch" red, white, and blue sign with a windmill graphic that brought $8,000. Another difficult to find service station sign, this double-sided piece did well despite some chipping to the porcelain.

Coming in at $7,000 was a sister sign to the above; another Old Dutch brand and also 71.5 inches in diameter, but this version stating "Aro-Speed" with the center "S" being larger in size. It was

Long-time auctioneer Doug Davies announces his retirement

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

DELPHI, Ind. — Five decades ago, a young Doug Davies balanced two very different worlds: by day, he worked as a banking representative in Illinois; by night, he helped a neighbor who was an auctioneer. That sideline eventually grew into full-time and would define his career for the next 50 years.

Doug, who describes himself as "self-taught," learned the auction business on the job. "I went to farm sales, livestock auctions...never on the antique side. Just farm stuff," he recalled. Those early years may not have involved antiques, but they gave him the practical know-how, sharp eye, and work ethic that would later serve him well as an auctioneer.

In 1978, he and his family relocated to Indiana and launched his auction business in earnest. Before long, his wife Sandy joined him, and together they became a trusted name in the region's auction and antiques scene. "I was mostly the behind-the-scenes guy," Doug explained, "and Sandy was the face of the business. A lot of customers worked with us because of her."

At first, antiques weren't a core part of the business. "When I started, I did all kinds of sales: farm, real estate, estate sales," Doug recalled. But a single event, early on, began to shift the focus. "My first really big sale was in 1979. There was a widow in Kokomo with a barn absolutely stacked full of New England things - buggies, sleighs, you name it. We were busy from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. I sold a quilt for $500 at 10 that night," he said, smiling. "That was my first really big sale. I've been busy ever since."

That experience, along with Doug and Sandy's long-standing interest in antiques, helped open their eyes to having antiques as a specialty. "My wife had family in Massachusetts, and we'd travel there and all over New England," he said. "We'd stop at markets and shows, and before long we were collecting New England furniture ourselves." Those experiences would evolve into the backbone of Davies Auctions' focus in the Americana market.

Over the years, they developed expertise in early American furniture, primitives, stoneware, and early firearms, among other specialties. "About 25 years ago, I started concentrating on the antiques side of things," Doug said. That emphasis helped Davies Auctions gain respect among collectors and dealers who valued their eye for quality historical significance. One longtime buyer remarked, "Doug and Sandy have a deep knowledge of fine Americana. Every auction was like taking a class in American history." Connie Swaim, managing editor here at Antique Week, shared similar praise: "He was an amazing auctioneer. His auctions were legendary for Indiana stoneware and outstanding Americana."

Over almost 50 years, Davies Auctions worked with more than 6,000 clients across Indiana and the Midwest. Even when the auction industry grew more corporate and impersonal, Doug and Sandy kept their business approachable and client-centered. Doug embodies these Midwest values - humble, practical, and hardworking.

red, white, and blue, and again this sign is very difficult to find.

Advertising clocks, license plates, and gas pumps also had representatives in the top lots of this sale. A 1906 porcelain Virginia First Issue Type 1 license plate with three digits was bid to $8,500. Measuring 5 inches by 10 inches, this difficult to find, type 1, first issue Virginia three-digit license plate sold with a note stating, “this plate was originally issued to Dr. Harry Jenkins of Norwalk Virginia 1906. The back is marked 8 indicating it was produced in August 1906, which would be the second production run for Virginia license plates.”

Leading the gas pump category was a Tokheim Volumeter 850 clock face example which sold for $3,400. Standing 80 inches tall, this pump did not have the glass globe often associated with old gas pumps, but a dial face though it was missing its outer glass cover. It also sported old decals with one stating, “property of Bermuda Airport.”

And where advertising clocks were concerned, the “Atlas Tires-Batteries and Accessories” neon example was hard to beat. All original and in working condition with just some light wear, this 19 inch by 18 inch by 6 inch example realized $2,400.

Then there was the item that had little to do with oil and gas but was very cool none-the-less. Selling for $2,250 was the 1925-1926 Cleveland Newman Stern women’s basketball World Cham-

Lalique dragonfly necklace will dazzle bidders at Cottone

GENESEO, N.Y. — On Thursday, Nov. 20, Cottone Auctions will offer a diverse collection of art and decorative objects from various private collections and private institutions.

Art Nouveau masters René Lalique and Louis Comfort Tiffany will kick off the auction. René Lalique’s fine and rare Four Dragonflies (Quatre Libellules) pendant-necklace and brooch, circa 1903–1905, exemplifies the height of his Art Nouveau vision, where jewelry became sculptural art. Crafted in plique-à-jour and champlevé enamel with aquamarines set in 18K gold, it captures light and motion through four delicately rendered dragonflies — symbols of transformation and fleeting beauty central to Lalique’s aesthetic. This jewel offers exceptional provenance and rarity (Est. $40,000-$60,000).

The 22-inch Peony lamp by Louis Comfort Tiffany, stands as one of the finest examples of his large-scale work, the expansive, blue-ground leaded shade, rendered with rare drapery glass to depict a lush peony, exemplifies his mastery of natural forms, flowing lines, and painterly color effects. The lamp features an adjustable Library Standard Cushion base with a distinctive pod design, combining functional versatility with Tiffany’s signature sculptural and decorative detailing. (Est. $125,000-$175,000).

The auction’s modern and 20th-century art includes a silkscreen by Andy Warhol (American, 1928–1987), From Ten Portraits of Jews of the Twentieth Century, 1980. This work portrays Sarah Bernhardt (1844–1923), the legendary French stage actress known as the “Divine Sarah,” celebrated for her dramatic intensity, international fame, and groundbreaking roles in both classical and contemporary theatre (est. $15,000-$25,000).

A fine example of Emile Gruppe’s Florida coastal painting represents a distinct chapter in his oeuvre, produced primarily from the late 1940s through the 1970s. During extended winter stays along Florida’s Gulf Coast—particularly in Sarasota and Naples — Gruppe captured the region’s luminous light, tropical foliage, and tranquil waters. (est. $10,000-$15,000).

Fine estate silver features Tiffany & Co., Gorham, Asprey London, Paul Storr (1770-1844), Musashiya Yokohama (Meji Period) and an array of fine estate jewelry and watches by Cartier, Van Cleef & Arpels and Rolex.

Collectors of fine paintings and decorative arts will appreciate a serene work by John F. Kensett (American, 1816 1872). Narragansett Coast invites contemplation of the 19th century quest to reconcile nature, perception and spirituality in American art, exploring the evolution of landscape from the Hudson River School into Luminist modernity (est. $60,000-$60,000). Walter Launt Palmer’s Autumn Moonrise (1854–1932) captures a tranquil autumn evening, with a softly glowing moon illuminating the landscape. The composition—measuring 20 by 14 inches—features subtle gradations of sky and terrain, a hallmark of his training under the Hudson River School tradition and later his Impressionist leanings (est. $4,000-$6,000).

A collection of vintage guitars from a Western New York estate, includes a 1908 Gibson Style U Harp Guitar (est. $3,000-$5,000). The auction also includes a collection of Americana and Native American art, such as a Paukeigope (Kiowa) Cradleboard, circa 1890 (Est. $10,000–$15,000).

The sale will be held at Cottone Auctions’ gallery at 120 Court St. Geneseo, N.Y. For more information visit www.cottoneauctions.com

Antiques added charm to Worthington, Ohio’s biggest festival

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

WORTHINGTON, Ohio — On Saturday, September 20, downtown Worthington hosted its annual Old Worthington Market Day, one of the city’s longest-running and most popular festivals. Organized by the Worthington Area Chamber of Commerce, the event filled High Street and the Village Green with artisans, crafters, community groups, food stalls, and a steady crowd of visitors.

A highlight of this year’s event was the return of Antiques on the Green, an outdoor antique sale hosted by the Worthington Historical Society on the southeast Village Green. The sale featured about a dozen sellers spread along the brick sidewalks, amidst the cool grass and shade of the Green’s old trees. Mainly, they were local antique dealers and collectors from the Columbus metro area. Included in the mix was Worthington Antiques & Collectibles, which not only had a space on the Green but also a full shop nearby.

While the number of dealers was relatively small, the variety of antiques they offered was impressive. Shoppers could find everything from traditional pieces - like an Eastlake occasional table or a schoolmaster’s desk - to smaller treasures such as antique dolls, popular uranium glass, and collectibles like 1950s-era movie lobby cards. Much of the merchandise leaned towards traditional antiques, edifying Worthington’s historic setting. Sweetening the appeal, the prices were remarkably reasonable; that Eastlake table went for just $45, and the lobby cards were only $5 each. One generous collector even delighted children by giving away Matchbox and Hot Wheels cars during the show.

Antiques on the Green continues the Worthington Historical Society’s long tradition of hosting antiques events in Worthington. For decades, the Society sponsored a popular indoor antique show that drew as many as three dozen dealers from across the Midwest and served as its largest fundraiser. Antiques on the Green continues that legacy in a new, more accessible outdoor format that fits naturally alongside the larger Market Day festival.

Founded in 1955 after renewed community interest sparked by Worthington’s sesquicentennial, the Historical Society has evolved into a dedicated preservation organization. It has saved several of Worthington’s most important landmarks, including the Orange Johnson House, an early 19th-century brick home dating to around 1811, and the Old Rectory, a former Episcopal residence rescued from demolition, relocated by the Society, and now serving as its headquarters and museum shop. The Society also cares for the Hopewell Mound, a prehistoric Native American earthwork, linking its mission to preserving history that predates the town’s founding.

Worthington itself dates back to 1803, the same year Ohio became a state. Founded by the Scioto Company and led by James Kilbourne, the settlement was planned in the style of a New England village, complete with a central green designated for civic, educational, and religious use. Named for Thomas Worthington, a U.S. senator and later governor of Ohio who helped secure land for the settlement, the town has evolved significantly over time. Worthington evolved into a Columbus suburb following the arrival of the electric street railway in the 19th century and continued growing through the 20th century, but its tree-lined streets and historic buildings still preserve much of its early New England-inspired character. The Village Green, where the antique sale was held, is at the heart of that identity.

nod to history, just steps away, downtown was buzzing with the larger Old Worthington Market Day Festival. A portion of High Street - the town’s main thoroughfare - was closed to traffic, transforming the area into a pedestrian-friendly promenade lined with more than 160 vendors lining both sides of the street. Booths featured arts, crafts, and locally-produced goods along with several charitable and civic organizations, giving the event a strong community atmosphere.

Food vendors joined in as well, offering a variety of options, while local cafés and restaurants were open for business. As in past years, the city’s Designated Outdoor Refreshment Area (DORA) allowed patrons to purchase alcoholic beverages from participating merchants and carry them within a designated area downtown. Entertainment included performances by Stylic Music Studio and the Worthington High School Marching Band. A free shuttle helped manage parking and accessibility, running all day between the market area and parking spots near downtown.

Together, the Chamber’s Market Day festival and the Historical Society’s Antiques on the Green sale offered a well-rounded experience that blended local creativity, historical preservation, and community engagement. With strong attendance and favorable weather, this year’s event maintained its reputation as one of Worthington’s most anticipated and well-supported public celebrations.

Jesse James

learned it from his father-in-law years before. One verse reads, “The people held their breath/ When they heard of Jesse’s death/ And wondered how he ever came to die./ It was one of the gang called little Robert Ford/ He shot poor Jesse on the sly.”

As the legend grew, so did souvenirs and collectibles. Today, many Americans collect Old West items. Some collectors specialize in outlaw items. And, even in collections, the most popular outlaw is Jesse James.

A recent search of eBay for “Jesse James outlaw” had over 1,400 results listed. The most expensive offering that day was for a 1870s Jesse James tintype photograph that was offered for $749,000. The least expensive item was a 2006 Topps Jesse James trading card from the “Outlaw Old West” series. It was offered for $3.

Original tintypes occasionally are sold at auction, depicting Jesse, Frank, or one of the gang. An original tintype of Jesse will cost you but be aware there are numerous reprint photos of Jesse and of Frank as an old man. Also abundant are reprints of old wanted posters. It is rare that an original wanted poster surfaces, and, if one does, be prepared to pay plenty for it.

While rare, it is still possible to locate newspapers from 1882 that announce Jesse’s death. His killing made headlines across the nation. Dime novels are another popular collectible from the 1800s. And there are many biographies of Jesse or his gang members. One rare book is a 1st edition of James Buel’s “The James Boys” from 1883.

Jesse’s homestead still stands and is a museum today. Souvenir hunters chipped his original monument away long ago, but the museum sells many collectible items. And nearly every family in western Missouri has a story to tell about Jesse or a family heirloom that, according to family history, is connected to Jesse. My own family hails from the vicinity of Butler, Mo., and family history states that Jesse and Frank James were served dinner on our great-great-grandmother’s porch more than once. An uncle still has an old blue-willow coffee cup that he swears Jesse drank coffee from.

On exceptionally rare occasions, guns reportedly owned and used by Jesse go to auction, but they are usually only found in museums. And, if you are a rugged adventurer, treasure maps and stories of buried loot from the James’ gang are found in many states, including Missouri and Oklahoma.

Other collectible items include Jesse

Above: Photo of young Jesse James, probably taken near the end of the Civil War—note the three pistols, that you can see, he is carrying.

James action figures, movie posters from a score of Jesse James movies (even Roy Rogers depicted Jesse in a movie), Jesse James gaming tokens, postcards, commemorative steins, bronze statues, and belt buckles. The list of collectible James memorabilia is substantial.

If you or your entire family wishes to begin collecting James memorabilia, the logical place to start is a trip to Clay County, Missouri. Tour the James’ homestead, buy a biography in the gift shop, walk the land that Jesse once trod, and stand at Jesse’s grave, pondering over whether he was America’s Robin Hood or merely a cold-blooded killer.

Right: One sheet (27 inches x 41 inches) advertising poster from the 1947 Republic Pictures serial adventure Jesse James Rides Again, starring Clayton Moore, who later went on to fame as television’s The Lone Ranger. This poster is valued at $75 - $100.

Moss Lamps

That production flexibility means that there are well over 1,000 different models in the complete Moss inventory. Fortunately, many were captured in photos taken for assembly purposes.

Moss lamps were expensive for their time. Original table lamp prices ranged from $29.95 to $79.95, with floor lamps averaging $120-150. By comparison, high-end designer lamps by other companies were being advertised at “$40 the pair.” Still, despite their price tags, Moss lamps proved popular. Previously, furniture dealers had to sweeten customer deals on expensive items, such as sofas, by “throwing in” lamps. With Moss, that tradition went out the window. As one dealer remarked in a letter to the company, “with your lamps, we usually end up throwing in the sofa!”

As a general rule, collectors can be quite confident that if a lamp is made of Plexiglas, it was made by Moss. Other indicators:

*The Shades: “Spun glass” shades were a company hallmark. No other manufacturer was able to duplicate the Moss spun glass shade, and the company guarded its shade formula closely. Ingredients were ordered from different suppliers, then combined secretly at the Moss factory.

Spun glass is much like the “angel hair” used in holiday decorating. Workers would place the spun glass in sheet metal shade molds, then coat it with the Moss secret adhesive formula to create a hard shell. After curing, said Jerry Slater, former Moss General Manager, completed shades would “pop right out like cookies from a pan.”

Because spun glass was surprisingly lightweight, it was possible to create oversize shades with little interior support. Some Moss floor lamps have shades that are nearly 30 inches square.

*The Spinners: Mention “Moss lamps”, and you may get a puzzled reaction. Mention “the lamps that spin,” and recognition dawns. Although not all Moss lamps featured figurines on rotating platforms, those that do leave a lasting impression. Moss lamps produced during, and just after, World War II, were non-figural Plexiglas. and John Disney, platforms with hidden motors were incorporated into the lamps, and ceramic figurines, with pins running up through their bases, were attached to the platforms. When the correct switch was thrown, each figure began its sedate spin.

For the most part, the figurines used on Moss lamps were by design houses noted in their own right. Hedi Schoop, deLee Art, Ceramic Arts Studio, Lefton, Yona, Dorothy Kindell, Johanna, and Decoramic Kilns figures all make appearances on Moss lamps.

As Moss spinner lamps increased in popularity, the firm’s designers moved on to the next question: if a lamp could spin, what else could it do? The answer was “just about anything.” Beginning in the mid-1950s, there were Moss Music Box Lamps, each featuring a “Golden Tone Music Box.” A pull of the chain, and tinkling standards of the day delighted the listener. Moss radio lamps kept entertainment close at hand, and intercom lamps provided room-to-room communication. Clock lamps ranged from clock table lamps to clock room dividers, grandfather clock lamps, and even a “clock coffee table.”

Bursting with ingenuity, Moss designers also came up with fountains, waterwheels, and aquariums, each equipped with its own functioning Moss lamp. The wonders reached their zenith with the “Fish Tank Bar”, combining the functions of a lamp, aquarium, and bar, all in one unit.

After World War II, in the invigorating anything-goes world of modern design, Moss lamps fit right in. But as the 1950s edged into the mid-1960s, and unified decor schemes became popular, consumer interest shifted to lamps that were lamps, rather than “conversation pieces.” In 1968 lamp production ceased, and “Moss Manufacturing” became “Moss Lighting,” a successful distributor of European fine lamps.

Today, the bold design choices and whimsical charm of Moss lamps continue to attract collectors and inspire modern designers, with prices in the mid-hundreds. For “the lamps that spin,” popular taste has spun full circle.
