Belleek Pottery blends artistic mastery with Irish heritage

BY GAYLE MANLEY

Belleek Pottery takes well-deserved pride in being the oldest pottery in Ireland. For those who own or collect Belleek, the name is synonymous with artistry, hand-craftsmanship, and superb quality. But its longevity of more than 160 years is not a “luck of the Irish” scenario, rather, the result of determination, innovation and resiliency.

The Belleek story begins on the estate of Castle Caldwell in which the village of Belleek, County of Fermanagh was situated. Owner John Caldwell Bloomfield sought to find some type of work for displaced farm families following the devastation of the 1840s Potato Famine. A mineral survey had shown that his property along the Erne River contained deposits of feldspar, kaolin, clay, flint and shale. As an amateur mineralogist, he realized these rich natural resources and river access could support operation of a pottery works.

Through another business dealing, Bloomfield had met architect Robert Williams Armstrong. Armstrong became the driving force on a three-man team who collectively possessed the talent, resources and influence to establish a business. Armstrong recognized that rail transport could bring raw materials for Bloomfield’s kilns and provide a means to ship finished goods. He exerted his influence to sway officials to bring rail service to Belleek. Armstrong also saw the need to integrate a core group of skilled pottery workers into the agricultural employees who had been hired locally. He traveled to the well-known pottery region Stoke-on-Trent in England to secure experienced craftsmen.

The third team member, affluent Dublin merchant David Mc Birney, was persuaded to finance the startup operation. In 1858, the foundation stone was laid for the pottery building which bore Mc Birney’s name.

Belleek’s initial products were of high quality, but were not the fine often translucent Parian wares we know today. For most of the 19th century, the company produced telegraph insulators, washstands, mortars and pestles, hospital pans and tableware. Although decorative porcelain would debut at the Dublin Exposition in the 1870s, more utilitarian earthenware products continued to dominate sales and exports.

Within the 20th century, Belleek faced and overcame the challenging times of two World Wars, coal restrictions, ownership turnovers, and general market declines. The company’s earthenware lines sustained the business as management sought to modernize production facilities. Old-style bottle kilns and work-shops were replaced in order to advance transition to Parian China production. Creation of earthenware and stone-ware products ended in 1946.

Why are Belleek products referred to as Parian China? The descriptor relates to Paros, an island of Greece which was known for its marble quarries and mines. The white marble was flawless, finely textured and carried a translucent appearance. Manufacturers of pottery and china imitated these qualities in their products, but Belleek captured the luster flawlessly. Many followers consider Belleek to be the pinnacle in Parian-ware quality and design.

While Belleek has continued to innovate and change with the times, it has retained some “constants” linked with its legacy. Among the most important has been the “16 Hands” process instituted by the Company’s founder. From design through packing at completion, a hand-crafted piece of Belleek Fine Parian China is the result of work by 16 skilled artisans.

During its development, each piece undergoes a minimum of four quality inspections. Fettling of the pattern, biscuit (aka green ware) firing, and dipping are each sensitive process points at which a piece can shatter or fail to achieve Belleek’s high standards. No flaws are permitted – no drip, dimple, or bubble. According to a company spokesman, flawed items are never offered for sale as seconds. Rather, they are destroyed and the crushed particles of material are recycled. In short, artistic perfection is paramount and a long-standing point of pride for Belleek.

Another company constant has been the use of national Irish symbols within its trademark. One element, an Irish Wolfhound, sits with his head turned to look at a tower — presumably modeled after the round Devenish Tower in the County of Fermanagh. He is flanked by a traditional Irish harp and sprigs of the national flower, shamrocks. Trademarks have colors which are extremely helpful in determining the age of a specific piece. Collectors Note: Basket-ware is an exception to the colored trademark. On the underside of flat-bottom baskets, collectors will find china pads impressed with the word Belleek.

The 1880s “Shamrock” pattern remains a mainstay in Belleek’s production. Its simple yet captivating charm of green shamrocks against a basketweave design melds two Irish traditions. The shamrocks represent the patron of Ireland, St. Patrick. The basketry look is symbolic of the woven wicker baskets carried “in town and country” about the Irish countryside. The extensive Shamrock product line includes lamps, vases, giftware and a range of tabletop items – many with handles fashioned as shamrock stems.

Belleek Designer Fergus Cleary noted that iconic “Shamrock” tableware is

You can remember what happened in Vegas with a souvenir

BY BARBARA MILLER BEEM

Hear the name “Las Vegas,” and odds are “What happens in Vegas, stays in Vegas” immediately pops into mind. Or not. It might come as a bit of a shock that as of earlier this year, that catchy (and memorable) tourism slogan was tweaked to “What happens here, only happens here.”

But none of that matters to nostalgic fans who collect and preserve anything related to “Old Vegas.” For them, little else matters as they hearken back to a time when that Nevada desert town was the coolest place on earth. Situated in the middle of nowhere, a cluster of swanky hotels became the playground of cigarette-smoking, martini-drinking movie stars who worked hard and partied even harder. We’re talking Vegas, baby!

An oasis, the town of Las Vegas was founded in 1905 when the Salt Lake, San Pedro & Los Angeles Railroad purchased Rancho Las Vegas to secure the rights to its natural springs. Located midway between Salt Lake City and Los Angeles, Las Vegas was an ideal watering spot, according to Peter Michel, director of special collections and archives at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. It was, he said, “a sleepy railroad town.”

That soon changed. Construction of Hoover Dam, the largest federal public works project at the time, began in 1931, and thousands of workers, taking advantage of housing in the federal company town of Boulder City, poured into the area. In that same year, gambling was legalized in Nevada. Not surprisingly, with money in their pockets, dam laborers made the 30-mile rail trip to Las Vegas, where Freemont Street became a center for nightlife, Michel explained.

Roseville pottery has a lot to offer for collectors

BY PATRICIA FAULHABER

Welcome to 2020. It’s a new decade and a great time to start a new collection. Might be a good opportunity to take a look at Roseville Pottery. While Roseville has a much weaker value today than it did in the past, it is still a highly attractive pottery with offerings in a variety of shapes, sizes, colors, patterns and prices.

The pottery has a long and detailed history including 62 years of production from 1892 to 1953-54 producing 158 different lines. Since the end of production, collectors have kept the interest for the different lines of Roseville alive.

The company was formed in 1890 and originally produced wares such as flower pots, umbrella stands and cuspidors. Ten years later, the company started producing Roseville Rozane which became the first high quality Roseville art pottery line.

Above: This piece is from the Silhouette line from the 1950s. The pieces are typically made chunky and include a small panel with female nudes or florals. Colors are solid colors of blue-green, raspberry, brown and white. It’s marked with Roseville U.S.A. 769-9”.

Some of the pottery lines Roseville made in the early 20th century include the Crystalis (1905), Della Robbia (1905) and Aztec (1904). The demand for handcrafted pottery began to decline in the early teens so Roseville shifted production to the commercial type pottery.

Author, appraiser and collector Mark F. Moran starts wrote in Warman’s Roseville Pottery, “Roseville faced the same challenge of all potteries established in the late 19th century: Hire designers talented enough to create designs that would appeal to buyer tastes ranging from late Victorian, through Art Nouveau and Art Deco, and finally into Modernism. Roseville did a great job of that, hiring Frederick Rhead and Frank Ferrell as art directors.”

Moran first walked into an antique shop in 1973 and later became part-time dealer in the 1980s. He started writing antique reference books in the 1990s, with 27 books to his credit.

“Some of the highest priced lines right now include Futura which is still number one, followed by Rozane Olympia and Della Robbia,” said Moran “Some of the most produced were the floral lines

Las Vegas memories bring back laughs

I really don't remember what I had for dinner that night. Was it the "Pepper Steak (Chinese)" for $16, the "Broiled Ground Sirloin Steak" (aka "hamburger") for $16.50, or the "Charcoal Broiled Prime New York Steak" for $18.50 (served "Hoteliere," whatever that means)?

Whereas today I might be torn between the "Boned Rocky Mountain Trout, Sauté Amandine" for $15, or cast everything to the wind with the "Roast Prime Ribs of Eastern Beef (au Jus)" for $17.50, I'll bet that night in November 1973, I opted for the "safe choice" of "Roast Turkey with Savory Dressing, Giblet Gravy, Cranberry Sauce" for $15.50. I can guarantee that I passed on an array of á la carte appetizers (chopped chicken livers? filet of marinated Iceland herring in sour cream? I don't think so). And as for dessert, just saying, I'm guessing I went with either the sherbet ($0.75) or the Neapolitan ice cream for a buck.

Who cares? I certainly don't. Dinner was certainly not the highlight of the evening. But I will never forget that night in the Versailles Room at the Riviera Hotel in Las Vegas. And I doubt I will ever again spend a night laughing so hard as I did then.

Some background information: In the latter segment of my father's career, he was annually flown to some rather enticing location for conferences, all expenses paid for him. The family could accompany him if we picked up our share of the tab. And so while he was reporting to work for one week at the Riviera Hotel, you can bet Mom and I were in tow for what turned out to be our last family vacation before I flew the coop.

As it happened, there was an energy crisis in progress at the time of our visit, and the neon lights on the Strip and along Freemont Avenue were dimmed. As an aside, I understand that these days, those neon lights have been replaced with LEDs encased in colored plastic tubes. I can't help but think of the song "On Broadway," where "they say the neon lights are bright." Even dimmed, Las Vegas was daytime even at midnight.

INSIGHTS

During our visit, we snagged tickets to a show at Caesar's Palace, with headliners Anthony Newley ("What Kind of Fool Am I?") and Alan King (I honestly can't remember a single joke he told). My hopes of seeing Sonny and Cher were dashed when they cancelled at the last moment. Darn. Meanwhile, back at the Riviera, where even the ladies' room attendants wore sparkly gold sandals, we saw Shecky Greene (not memorable) and Tony Orlando and Dawn.

OK, let me stop here. Tony and his "Supreme-like" backup singers had just released a new album, their "Ragtime Follies." It was toe-tapping, and I bought the record nearly as soon as our plane touched down back home. On a depressing note: This recording has been resigned to the dollar bin of my local vinyl shop. Oh, and Don Rickles was also in the house.

So here's the thing. I'm really not into insulting people. I thought he did a decent job in later years voicing "Mr. Potato Head" in the Toy Story franchise. And although he was not quite cool enough to be a full-fledged card-carrying member of the "Rat Pack," I think it's fair to say he was on the "B" team. (Personal note: I once sat next to Dorothy Hamill for dinner at the Center Club in Baltimore, and her ex-father-in-law was Dean Martin, so that makes me, what? two degrees of separation from Dino?)

Anyway, to put it mildly, Don Rickles was hysterical. He came out on stage and asked some questions of members of the audience and somehow learned there was a convention of agronomists in the crowd. He pulled a few of them up on the stage, called them "dummies" and "hockey pucks," and the crowd went wild. We laughed our heads off at the thought of being in the presence of a convention of agronomists.

The next morning, I couldn't begin to remember what was so funny, except that everyone, and I mean everyone, was roaring. As for Don, once he found something that he could turn into a joke, he shook it like a terrier. No hard feelings. It was just an evening of fun.

Even the agronomists were laughing. The man could work a room.

I never made it back to Sin City. Plans to see the Beatles' "Love" show just didn't seem to pan out. I rue the fact that it's seldom that a roomful of people can get together these days and have a good laugh. No wonder people want to hang on to a small memento from that special time and place.

Ten years later, with the onset of World War II, the town experienced another boom, due to its proximity to several military installations and a magnesium plant. Hotels with dude ranch themes (and names to match) sprang up along Highway 91 (later called “The Strip”), including El Rancho Vegas and the Hotel Last Frontier (later known as the New Frontier and then, the Frontier).

“Upscale, sleek, and chic.” That’s how Michel described post-War development in Las Vegas. “Hollywood and gangsters” put their mark on new hotels, including the Flamingo, the Desert Inn, the Sands, and the Thunderbird, among others. New construction reflected mid-century modern style, including the airport and the convention center. Curiously, that vintage “feel” lingered “longer here than anywhere else,” Michel noted.

Entertainers who traveled the country and performed on the nightclub circuit were booked, and Hollywood stars made the short hop to Vegas, where they headlined in small showrooms and “made a lot of money.” Frank Sinatra was a regular at the Sands’ Copa Room, he continued, and other members of the “Rat Pack,” including Dean Martin, Peter Lawford, and Sammy Davis, Jr., regularly dropped in on each other’s acts with adlibbed performances. They were wildly popular (even though they “don’t seem that funny anymore,” Michel wryly pointed out). But personifying the times, these stars were, he said, the “Kings of Cool.” And then there were the showgirls.

Today, even though the hotels are bigger than ever and the shows even more extravagant, with gastronomic offerings from world-famous chefs, there are those who won’t let “Old Vegas” die, as they collect memorabilia from the Rat Pack days. “If it smells like a dusty ashtray, it’s ‘Old Vegas,’” remarked Jeff Anthony, waxing enthusiastically about the “rooms with circular booths, brass tile ceilings, and lounge singers.”

Anthony, proprietor of Vintage Vegas, estimated that 90 percent of his customers are tourists. As such, his inventory includes a variety of smalls, souvenirs that easily fit into a suitcase. Vintage postcards picturing mid-century hotels (before they were met by the wrecking ball) and menus are popular purchases, as are matches and ashtrays. Decks of casino playing cards might go for $8 to $25; dice, $15 to $125; and swizzle sticks, $8 to $15. Chips can sell for as little as $20 to $500, or much, much more. On the other hand, Anthony recalled the time he shipped a 1,500-pound Stardust phonebooth from Las Vegas to Canada. As for signs, lounge tables and barstools, and roulette and money wheels, “Casino stuff is always hot,” he noted.

Among other items offered at Vintage Vegas is mid-century formalwear for both men and women, including tuxedos with gaudy jackets and previously worn wedding dresses. Available for purchase or rental, these items are of particular interest to Vegas visitors who want to dress up like the Rat Pack and have a retro wedding. “There’s a hairdresser down the street who does ’50s hairdo’s,” Anthony added.

There’s no limit to what collectors will buy, and after 13 years in the business, the shop owner has a good handle on what people want and why. For instance, when the Riviera closed, he scooped up the pushbutton phones that were formerly in guestrooms. Because they bore the logo of the hotel, they sold. Anthony concluded that it’s not unusual for customers to walk into his shop and say, “We were married at the Riviera; we’ll buy whatever you have.”

Garry Schrum understands this well. The director of Heritage Auctions’ music and entertainment division married his wife in Las Vegas, and they stayed at the Flamingo. It’s no surprise, then, that he proudly displays a lamp from that hotel in his home.

Shrum continued that Elvis is “obviously ‘Number One’” when it comes to collectible headliners. Over the years, Heritage has sold scarves that the singer tossed into the audience. And then there was the cape caught by a woman who sustained personal injury while claiming it. In addition to wardrobe pieces (a hat from Frank Sinatra and a cane from Sammy Davis, Jr., to name but two), the auction company has also found new homes for signed contracts, as well as autographed pictures and menu, even a placeholder for a table with a hotel’s name on it. Anything from a demolished or remodeled casino, including drinking glasses and chandeliers, murals and outdoor signs, sells well, he pointed out.

And then there is the currency of Vegas, casino chips, a collecting category unto itself. Rarity, age, and value are factors in determining the worth of these miniature gems, which often bear iconic graphics. Shrum added that hotel gift shops sell new limited-edition chips as souvenirs, however.

Certainly, Las Vegas itself (and not just its tourism slogan) has changed over the years. Today’s Vegas is a far cry from the railroad stopover that it once was. But although many of the hotels and casinos are gone or have been rebuilt, the ghosts of Sinatra and his cronies, Elvis, Liberace, and others, live on.

from the 1930s making them the easiest for collectors to find.”

Markings, artists signatures, logo stamps and a unique numbering system all help collectors identify the real deal. Early pieces were artist signed, later a blue Rv stamp was used. Other marks included numbers and a sticker.

Some of the early pieces from 1900–1904 were marked with Rozane ROCo or Rozane Ware which could be found on some of the early Roseville Rozane lines. Sometime in the mid-1930s, the familiar Roseville was used on the bottoms and was later changed to “Roseville U.S.A.” which was used until the company closed.

There are also a series of numbers on the bottom of each of the later pieces representing the series and the size of the piece. For example, a piece marked, “Roseville U.S.A. 769-9” would be from the 769 line and is 9 inches in size. There are over 20 different markings that Roseville used so it’s best to find resources or reference books that detail the different marks.

Roseville artists signatures include Elizabeth Ayers, Virginia Adams, A. F. Best, Katy Duvall, Madge Hurst, John Herold Mary

Pierce, Mae Timberlake, Arthur Williams among close to 40 others. Most artists signed with just their initials while others included their first name initial and their full last name.

There are other items to watch for including the quality of the glaze, the color quality, size of the handles and the color of the underclay. Laurelhollowpark.net states the glaze on most reproductions is dull and lacks depth. Handles on the fakes tend to be thicker and details aren’t as defined. Leaves on real pieces are brighter and stand out from the background. And, the background colors vary “significantly” from the original colors with the color of the clay much whiter than the real pieces.

“You have to train your eye to spot mold variations and colors that don’t seem correct. Some of the Roseville isn’t marked including some of the earliest pieces or some of the floral designs. The Jonguil pattern has the most fakes in circulation. It could be because the line is made from a simple mold. As with all categories, reproductions are a significant factor in lowering values,” Moran said.

Moran said, “All pottery, antiques and collectibles across the board have faced a decline in value over the last 30 years. Buy the best example you can afford, network with other collectors, upgrade your collection over time. Right now is a great time to buy with prices at these low levels.”

the most requested item with U.S. customers. In 1963, President Kennedy and his wife Jackie were presented a Shamrock tea set during their visit to Ireland. At that time the set was valued at approximately 200 pounds. The set featured more than 20,000 pounds at Sotheby’s in 1996.

Inspiration for Belleek’s beautiful designs has come from Irish culture, natural forms, archived patterns and period trends. For example, the “Neptune” suite, a popular series with collectors, was derived from a sea shell. Its nature-inspired theme, authentic styling and coloration had strong appeal to Victorians. The suite was produced for more than 100 years with multiple wash colors. Most sought-after antique pieces include teapots, cups, saucers, plates and full cabernet sets.

In the 20th and 21st centuries, Belleek has stayed attuned to the wants and needs of both collectors and modern consumers. Cleary pointed out the positive reception that today’s Claddagh mugs have received with buyers around the world. The Irish claddagh — a symbol of love, loyalty and friendship — is a current trend in both jewelry and giftware. Another specialty, the “Belleek Masterpiece Collection,” offers reproduced limited editions of varied designs from the company’s past.

Registered collectors are given a special opportunity to purchase annual product releases.

For readers looking to collect vintage or antique Belleek items, intricate and delicate baskets have risen in value. A company spokesman commented about the artistic mastery required to assemble strands of china clay into woven braids and lattice. The fragile openwork is often accented by pastel flowers. Each tiny petal is hand-molded, painted and applied using tools such as a razor blade, nail, and pin. Lamps have a steady following as do teapots in nearly every pattern. Figurines, candelabrum, and most items with applied flowers command high prices in online auctions and at antique centers.

Long-time collector Bill Butke added some collecting perspective and practical tips. He and his wife bought their first Belleek vase back in 1966. At the time, the couple had no idea what Belleek was, but the design spoke to them with a theme that related to their Irish heritage. He remarked: “As a beginning collector, seek out what calls to you versus basing the decision on possible future value. Belleek offered a wide range of subjects in its designs. Research the choices in advance of buying.” Some collectors choose to seek out pieces from the earlier Belleek periods when wares bore a “Black Mark” backstamp. Butke also recommended books by Richard K. Degenhardt or Marion Langham as reference guides for patterns and other Belleek background.

More information about Belleek’s history, products and museum can be found at www.Belleek.com. With the timeless beauty of Belleek, you can enjoy a touch of Ireland every day!

From stream-lined to Western: it is all 20th century

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

CINCINNATI — There's no doubt that mid-century modern remains hot. Yet the jet age themes and Googie lines of mid-century modernism don't define the entire 20th century. The modernist style of the post-war years emerged from a much earlier era, traceable to the Bauhaus and International movements in the first two decades of the 20th-century and was clearly influenced by Industrial Age modernism of the Art Deco and Streamline eras prior to World War II.

The 1950s weren't strictly modernist, either. Patriotic and early American themes showed up in everything from furniture to kitchen appliances. Similarly, the Old West was idealized in popular 1950s media, toys of the era, home decor, and even reflected in the names of cars like Ford's Mustang and Thunderbird. Then, there were the GIs who returned from Pacific Theater, who, stuck in workaday jobs, pined for the South Seas and the Far East helping make Asiana, Polynesian pop, and even Primitivism popular.

The main draw at 20th-century Cincinnati is certainly mid-century modern — and the booths are packed with items from makers like Herman Miller and Knoll. Yet, the show's name connotes much more than a single decade and style. Amidst the boomerang tables and starburst clocks, you'll find merchandise spanning the full array of the 20th-century.

That breadth was evident outside the main ballroom. On display was a 1970 Datsun 240Z, the debut year for the definitive Japanese Z-car line. It was exhibited in affiliation with The Cincinnati Concours d' Elegance, begun in 1978, now one of the most significant classic car shows in the country.

Inside, it was evident that Art Nouveau and Art Deco were prevalent, much of it in the booths of dealers courted during the show's formative years. One of them, Deco Dazzle of Virginia had a spread of streamline merchandise, including barware and lighting in chrome and cobalt blue. Particularly eye-catching was a chrome ball on black glass dish for $75 paired perfectly with a cobalt blue cocktail set for $235. Deco Dazzle's owners do an amazing job of uncovering movie images from the era featuring the exact merchandise they sell.

From Chicago came Somewhere in Time, offering pieces of jewelry made in 1920s Czechoslovakia, discovered locked in a Czech warehouse for over 80 years! Popular mid-20s colors like cobalt blue, red, and green complimented Art Deco and Art Nouveau motifs like dragonflies and elegant ladies and Egyptian symbolism, popular after the opening of King Tut's tomb in 1922. The beautiful, truly one-of-a-kind pieces averaged between $300-400.

Those drawn to the 1950s but not necessarily to modernism had many options. Colonial-American themes appeared in items like a four-piece set of stylized rooster measuring cups for $55. Sock-hop 50s came compliments of items like a blue wicker sewing basket with a felt poodle for $55 and several soda shop items including a Wimpy Hamburger figurine for $275. There was plenty of Old West merchandise like a pair of Wallace Rodeo Range salt and pepper shakers for $85 and a Hopi bear Kachina for $75. Fifties popular culture also showed up in scores of advertising pieces including a 1950s Fizzies candy display for $300 and a working Schlitz beer sign for $4,900.

There was scattered Floridiana, like the pair of ceramic flamingos for $98. And, there were a few Polynesian Pop items, including a made-in-Japan tiki mug for $24 and a Vogue pinup Picture Record for Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea at $44. Asian collectors had pieces like a Jadeite statue from China priced at $35 and two small dragonware pitchers, also from China, for $22.

The last third of the 20th-century was well-represented, with nearly as much merchandise as the Art Deco years. One dealer had several 1970s Polaroid Land Camera kits for around $95 while another had a handful of Playboy club tankards from the 60s and 70s for under $5 each. And, several brass wall sculptures, popular in the early 1970s were in various booths, priced typically from $100 to $300.

Of course, mid-century modern furniture and accouterments were everywhere. But, sticking with the more unusual modernist items, many guests ogled a salesman’s sample for Futura Above Ground Pools (purportedly promoted at one time by Bob Hope) available for $850. A Sputnik-shaped outdoor advertising sign, in working condition, was priced at $5,500. And, for airline fans, a 24-inch tin litho model of a pre-1960s Pan Am propeller Stratocruiser awaited a buyer at $225.

In the hallway, several additional vendors included Charley Harper Studios offering serigraphs and prints from Cincinnati’s famous “minimal realist” wildlife artist (1922-2007). Author Shawn Patrick Tubb was on hand to sign copies of his recently released book on Cincinnati’s Terrace Plaza Hotel. The landmark 18-story building, constructed between 1943 and 1948, was the first International Style hotel built in America and one of the most technologically advanced buildings in the world at the time. Just before exiting was Gotham Cruisers, an automotive customizing shop known for its full-size Batmobile and Bat Cycle kits and full-builds. Unmistakable was their full-sized replica of Robot B-9 (otherwise known as the robot from Lost in Space).

20th-Century Cincinnati is held in February of each year. Queen City Shows also runs the Ohio Country Antique show in October and Tri-State Antique Markets from May to October.

Stone walls being repaired on Aquidneck Island topic of lecture

NEWPORT, R.I. – Old stone walls might not get as much attention as Gilded Age mansions, but these remnants of colonial agriculture also are vital to local history. That’s why The Preservation Society of Newport County, best known for its historic house museums such as The Breakers, joined with Providence-based Preserve Rhode Island to form the Aquidneck Stone Wall Initiative in 2018.

On Thursday, March 19, at noon, the Preservation Society’s former policy associate Leigh Schoberth will present “Aquidneck Stone Wall Initiative: Preserving the Island’s Historic Character.” Schoberth, now senior preservation services manager at Historic New England, will talk about the history of stone walls and the local efforts to preserve them.

Stone walls on Aquidneck Island date back centuries. Today, many are fragmented and increasingly falling into disrepair. This incremental loss threatens the future of this quintessential New England landscape feature.

To date, the Aquidneck Stone Wall Initiative has led the restoration of historic stone walls at Simmons Farm and the Norman Bird Sanctuary, both in Middletown. The projects were funded by the Van Beuren Charitable Foundation.

Schoberth’s lecture is the fifth and final in the Preservation Society’s Winter Lecture Series. Admission costs $5 for Preservation Society members and $10 for the general public. For more information or to register, visit www.newportmansions.org/learn/adult-programs or call (401) 847-1000.

The Preservation Society of Newport County, Rhode Island, celebrating its 75th anniversary in 2020, is a nonprofit organization accredited by the American Alliance of Museums. It is dedicated to preserving and interpreting the area’s historic architecture, landscapes, decorative arts and social history. Its 11 historic properties – seven of them National Historic Landmarks – span more than 250 years of American architectural and social development.
