View-Master's tiny photos brought the world home

By Doug Graves

If you feel like traveling, but the pandemic has put your plans on hold, consider taking a virtual trip via the View-Master.

View-Master is a trademark name of a line of special-format stereoscopes and corresponding View-Master "reels" made of thin cardboard disks containing seven stereoscopic 3-D pairs of small transparent color photographs in film. Simply slip in a round disk of your favorite subject and with a push of a button you can enjoy the scenes.

Vacation travel wasn't prolific in the 1930s and idea behind the advent of the View-Master was to bring such attractions to the general public.

The View-Master system was introduced in 1939, four years after the advent of Kodachrome color film made the use of small high-quality photographic color images practical. The item itself was first introduced at the New York World's Fair in 1939 as an alternative to the postcards.

At the onset, tourist attractions and travel views dominated View-Master's early list of reels, most of which were meant to be interesting to users of all ages. Manufacturers branched out from there with topical items like birds, flowers, trees and animals of all kinds.

"A View-Master reel holds 14 film transparencies in seven pairs, making up the seven stereoscopic images," says Dwight Hensley of Athens, Ohio. Hensley collects old photos used in stereoscopes and possesses an array of View-Masters. "The components of each pair are viewed simultaneously, one by each eye, thus simulating binocular depth deception. What a concept that was at the time," Hensley added.

View-Master was originally marketed through photo shops, stationery stores and scenic attraction gift shops.

The View-Master was invented by William Gruber, an organ maker and avid photographer who lived in Portland, plastic.

Oregon. He had intended the item to be a children's toy and nothing more. Gruber was fascinated with a Victorian optical device known as a stereoscope, which created an illusion of 3D using two side-by-side photographs. He fashioned his portable stereoscope using Kodachrome color film.

In 1933, Gruber was touring the Oregon Caves National Park and met Harold Graves, president of Sawyer's Inc., a company specializing in souvenir picture postcards. Gruber shared his vision, and Graves had the know-how in bringing Gruber's idea to

The two debuted the View-Master to the public at the World's Fair in New York where it was sold as a souvenir of the event. After the Fair, the two began selling the devices at specialty photography and stationery stores, and the reels they produced depicted scenes from national parks throughout the United States.

Gruber was instrumental in its construction. He designed a machine that mounted the tiny pieces of Kodachrome 16-mm color transparency film into reels made from heavy paper stock. A special viewer was also designed and produced.

By 1941, more than 100,000 stores offered View-Masters to the general public. In 1941, the U.S. Government commissioned millions of View-Master reels from Gruber and Sawyers to teach servicemen how to identify airplanes and ships.

A similar manufacturer gave View-Master a run for its money and was called Tru-Vue. This company produced the filmstrips as well as the viewers themselves. Tru-Vue's viewers were made in multiple colors. Tru-Vue concentrated on subjects of attractive scenery, children's stories, travel, night life and current events.

In 1951, Sawyer's Inc. bought out this competition. Both View-Master and Tru-Vue products were manufactured in to the 1960s by Sawyers. That same year, Sawyer's Inc.

Uncola items soaked up bids at Alexander Auctions

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

MARTIN, Tenn. — For almost four months, the auction field has been nearly stalled because of COVID-19 quarantining. Yet, firms like Tennessee's Alexander Auctions & Real Estate Sales, which turned their efforts to online auctioning, were able to weather the situation better than most.

Alexander Auction's June 23 sale is a good illustration. The Tennessee auctioneer, with over five decades of experience, utilized an online-only sale for a dazzling auction of nearly 500 7Up collectibles that originated from a Tennessee estate. Conducted via the MarkNet Alliance platform, the sale featured more than 100 metal, tin, and lighted signs, along with numerous mirror signs, menu signs, and clocks. There were scores of magazine advertisements, posters, and lithographs that spanned the 20th century, as well as drink and dispenser machines, coolers, 300+ bottles, bottle caps, and contemporary collectibles.

Sign lovers had a field day, and the array was impressive. Right out of the gate, vintage signs grabbed three-figure prices. Lot 3, a 40-inch, 1960s St. Louis made "Fresh up with 7Up" bubble-style oval tin sign sold for $350 despite showing some fading, wear, and possible repainting. Next up, grabbing $150 was a 46-inch rectangular sign for the Diet version of 7Up known as "LIKE."

Rock Island lines up another amazing gun offering

ROCK ISLAND, Ill. — It will definitely be guns a blazing at Rock Island Auction Company's September Premier Firearms Auction, Sept. 11-13. The list of historic pieces offered is impressive.

The Smith & Wesson name is certainly no stranger to enthusiasts, but the assortment found in this auction is anything but typical. Items crafted by legendary 19th century American engravers decorate the item listings with an impressive quantity of revolvers and lever action pistols. Tiffany & Co., Louis D. Nimschke, and Gustave Young are only just a few names that immediately differentiate themselves from the others, but there is far more that this auction has to offer for collectors. Extremely rare lever action repeating pistols, revolving rifles, and embellished firearms so detailed even the hammer is not immune to elegant designs can be found.

A Rock Island Auction Company Premier Auction just would not be complete without input from Samuel Colt. Revolvers, pistols and carbines absolutely dominate the items with stunning, beautiful, and legendary weapons found across history that defined eras and revolutionized warfare. A Colt single action "Buntline Special" instantly stands out among the other impressive lots not only because of its authenticity (indicated in the factory letter and markings) but also because of outstanding condition that remains after nearly 150 years. Rock Island Auction Company is excited to present an astonishing black powder Single Action Army revolver personally belonging to Bob Dalton of the infamous Dalton Gang that was used during their famed Coffeyville double bank robbery.

A guide for what to do if your valuables are stolen

BY DANIEL GRANT

First, the bad news. Your Toulouse-Lautrec poster, your George II parcel gilt padauk cabinet, your baseball card collection with that 1909 Honus Wagner, your something of great value is gone, stolen undoubtedly. What to do?

There are many options for homeowners/collectors who have found something to be missing, and it is understandable if they are a bit impatient (I reported the theft two days ago!) and want to do as much as possible to bring about a recovery. Should one contact the local police or one's insurance provider, the FBI (https://www.fbi.gov/investigate/violent-crime/art-theft/national-stolen-art-file), Interpol (https://www.interpol.int/Crime-areas/Works-of-art/Works-of-art), Art Loss Register (http://www.artloss.com/en) or hire a private detective? Or, all of them? Since ICE has an art theft division (https://www.ice.gov/cultural-art-investigations), should it be contacted?

The first course of action is to contact the local police, because the next steps largely are based on the existence of a police report, but actually some things should have been done much earlier. The police or any other agency that might track down and recover the stolen item need as much information as possible about the missing piece, such as detailed written descriptions of it, receipts, photographs of it (several, including front, back and side views, as well as images of what makes it identifiable, such as a chip on the leg of a side table), condition reports and up-to-date appraisals. If the object is a work of art, it should have been registered with the London-based Art Loss Register (https://www.artloss.com). The cost is $15 per item at the time of purchase. The Gemological Institute of America (https://www.gia.edu/) works with law enforcement on request for stolen gemstones that it has evaluated.

Owners of valuable items also should obtain insurance coverage for these pieces, either as a rider to their homeowners' policies or as stand-alone fine art insurance policies. Most homeowner's policies cover the contents of one's home, which may include art, antiques, jewelry, silver and other valuables. This insurance will cover theft and damage to collectibles, but there may be a limit for how much the insurer will pay for a single item - typically, $10,000 for a single item - and there is often a deductible. A $500 deductible may eliminate the prospect of receiving a claim for a vase. Homeowner's policies cover certain types of perils, such as fire or a falling tree limb, but not earthquakes or floods, which need to be purchased separately. Many homeowner's policies have exclusions, not covering breakage (a vase or sculpture falls on the floor) or when an object is in transit (damage to

The sign, originally manufactured by the 90 Stout Sign Company of St. Louis, showed some slight bends and wear. Other signs like a 1951-era, Pennsylvania-made "Fresh Up" sign went for as much as $850.

Later in the auction came advertising pieces for "Howdy", a drink that originated in the 1920s and eventually became 7Up. Lot 24 contained seven items, including a 9-inch "The Way to Howdy" tin sign, a hanging paper sign "Don't Say Orange Say Howdy," a hanging paper "Howdy Party" sign, a framed posted under plexiglass for "Creighton Bottling Works," a framed Howdy cartoon advertisement, a framed "Howdy Pioneer Soda Works" label, and a 9-inch "Drink Howdy" tin sign. A winning bid of $625 grabbed it all.

A small number of lighted signs were available including a working neon 7Up logo in red and green that sold for $145. Another partially working neon sign sold for $125. Winning bids on various lighted plastic signs ranged from under $50 to over $300.

There were numerous advertising items including an eye-catching 7Up display featuring a post-war Duraglass bottle resting on a chunk of clear glass resembling an ice block. It sold for $115. Interested buyers had five 7Up branded door pushes to bid on, including a 30-inch silver rack with "7Up on each side of a center sign which read, "Fresh Up With 7-Up:" it fetched $310.

Clocks were also popular as seen with lot 31, selling for the auction's highest bid of $2,000. The good-condition, working lighted 20-inch plastic clock featured a black band around its circumference, labeled "7up Bottling Company, Martin, Tenn." Twenty other clocks sold for amounts ranging from $16 to $625.

Due to COVID concerns, inspections prior to auction were not permitted and onsite pickups were held by appointment only. Packing, shipping, and insurance were available. It may have been shipping realities that damped interest on larger pieces like the 1960s-era Vendorlator vending machine which sold comparatively low. The glass-doored machine, still set up for 15-cent pricing, was picked up for just $52.50 A beautiful freestanding store cooler labeled "Fresh Up With Seven-Up" sold for just $180, while a dispenser head with a plastic 7Up emblem with spigots for 7Up, cola, orange and grape sodas went bit higher, to $200.

a painting being moved from the primary residence to a summer cottage, for instance). Fine arts insurance policies for private collectors, on the other hand, have no deductibles and pay the full appraised value of a stolen or damaged object without regard to how the piece was damaged; they generally cover all major contingencies, such as floods, earthquakes, tornados and even acts of terrorism. as well as damage occurring while the piece is being moved. The cost of a fine arts policy varies widely based on what is being insured and where the objects are located, but one may assume that yearly premiums for a $100,000 art collection ranges from $100 to $300, and premium reductions are available when the homeowner has smoke detectors and security alarm systems.

"If there are signs of forced entry, such as broken window or door lock that was jimmied, then it's pretty clear that anything missing was probably stolen," said Steve Lindsay, a senior claims professional for Huntington T. Block, an insurance underwriter that specializes in collectibles, such as art and antiques. The place where the theft took place is now a crime scene, so homeowners should refrain from touching anything before the police arrive and begin their investigation, according to Robert Wittman, a former senior investigator of the FBI's National Art Crime Team who now works as a home security consultant. The local police may contact the FBI, depending upon the nature and value of the stolen item(s). "Local theft isn't a federal crime, but rare and particularly valuable items are more likely to be taken across state lines to be fenced," which is when a federal agency would have jurisdiction, Wittman said. Homeowners themselves could contact the FBI, but the agency is more apt to start a case file when a police department gets in touch. It would be an agent from the FBI who might contact Interpol, the international crime-fighting organization based in Lyon, France, or U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement if there is a likelihood that the item may cross international borders.

The theft of valuables and collectibles frequently is an inside job, committed by or through the assistance of someone with access to a home.

(For card) Gift from ____ such as the cleaning service or one or another contractor. It doesn't make sense for homeowners themselves to conduct their own investigation of these people, but they should inform law enforcement of those who had been inside their homes. The police "may have an idea of who stole it, but they don't want someone to tip their hand by making accusations before they are ready to make an arrest," said Allison Sweeney, senior account executive at DeWitt Stern, a New York City-based insurance brokerage.

After contacting the police, the second call should be to one's insurer - the insurance policy itself will indicate if one calls the broker or the company itself. The insurance company will send out an adjuster who will begin the process of filing a claim and might also contact the Art Loss Register to report the theft. That registry is important, because the major auction houses usually check with it when an object is consigned for sale to them. The insurance adjuster also is likely to work with the police to determine whether or not to call in other agencies.

Still, most victimized homeowners want to be more involved than just informing the police or their insurance carrier of a theft and letting others take over. "Most police departments look at theft of valuables as simple property crime," Wittman said, making "no difference between a Picasso and a Chevrolet," and if the missing object doesn't turn up in a week, they forget about it. "Less than five percent of all stolen property is recovered," he said, adding that the percentages increase for rare and particularly valuable objects, because the number of locations where those pieces may reenter the market - higher-end shops, galleries and auction houses - are more limited and more likely to check provenance and any reports of theft. Homeowners can be helpful to investigators in listing the shops where the types of objects that they are reporting stolen

A final way in which homeowners may help is by offering a reward for information leading to the recovery of the object. The wording of the reward notice is important, because "it is illegal to pay someone who stole an object," and the money could only go to a person who was not involved in the theft or who had attempted to sell the item, according to Bonnie Magness-Gardiner, former Art Theft Program manager at the FBL. The usual range of reward is between $5,000 and $25,000. "Rewards may be helpful in obtaining information," Sweeney said. "There often is no loyalty among thieves."

Above: Valuable items are more likely to be recovered once stolen as the places one can sell them are more limited.

A last note: When a recovery does take place and the stolen object is returned to its rightful owner, it is likely that more than a year will have elapsed, and it could be several or more years. Calling the police every day won't help.

Finding safe distractions in times of a pandemic

How's everyone doing out there? As well as possible, I hope.

During the first three months of this global pandemic that everyone has been suffering from in one way or another, I was under the gun with a book deadline, sometimes working 12- and 16-hour days. This was on top of my other responsibilities, which include running a booth in an antique mall, filming videos for my YouTube channel, and taking care of the usual family stuff.

Being super busy was a good thing. It helped keep my mind off the crazy, and we all know how comforting it can be to bury your nose in a good book (even if it is one you are writing). However, once The NES Omnibus Vol. 1 (A-L) was finished and headed to the printer, wanderlust took over, and it was time to get out of Dodge. Or, in my case, out of Fort Worth.

Prior to the pandemic, I had numerous trips planned for this year. Not only were we taking our annual family summer vacation, I had conventions lined up all over the country where I was to be a guest author and panelist. I always enjoy video game and comic book conventions—meeting with readers, searching for bargains/treasures, seeing the local sights, hanging out with friends—but, of course, virtually all of them for 2020 have been cancelled. This increased my need to hit the road once my deadline was done.

And hit the road my wife Charis and I did. Because of the pandemic, we decided to stay close to home, heading three hours north to Oklahoma City and, a few days later, three hours south to Austin. Just a simple overnight stay in each town.

The first leg of the first trip took us to the Oklahoma City National Memorial, which honors the victims, survivors, rescuers, and everyone else affected by the April 19, 1995 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. A sober way to start a mini-vaca to be sure, but it's a respectful and serene exhibit that is reassuring in the sense that humanity is resilient and has an uncanny way of surviving, even in the face of overwhelming horror.

We had a much lighter, much breezier time the rest of our stay in Oklahoma, dining with a friend I usually see only at conventions and driving down a portion of Route 66 in Arcadia that we had been wanting to visit. We popped into Pops restaurant, which features a 66-foot neon soda bottle out front and a dazzling array of sodas for sale inside, and checked out the quirky, atmospheric Oklahoma County Auto Trim and Mini Museum, where we ogled all manner of Route 66 memorabilia, including vintage road signs, classic cars, and an old hippie bus.

We also stopped off at a curious little collectibles shop, where I snagged a Thundarr the Barbarian lunch box and thermos for just $23. Thundarr, a sword and sorcery cartoon set on a post-apocalyptic earth (fittingly enough), was one of my favorite shows when I was a kid, right up there with Land of the Lost and The Super Friends. I could sell the set on eBay for $100 or so, but this baby is not for sale—it will hold a prominent (not to mention permanent) place in my office.

I didn't land a rare lunch box during our trip to Austin, but we did have a good time hitting our usual haunts, including Half-Price Books, a regional chain that has numerous stores in Texas. I found a few odds and ends (including a hard-to-find Superman quiz book from 1978 for just $2), but pickings have been relatively slim at the various HPBs of late.

Above Left: I found this Thundarr the Barbarian lunch box with thermos for just $23 at a collectibles shop along Route 66. Above Right: I love the psychedelic '60s, so posing with this hippie bus was a must.

Thanks to a pandemic policy, customers must make an appointment to sell items to the stores and can only bring in a limited quantity of books, records, magazines, video games, etc. This has made the shelves a little barebones and turnover of stock less frequent. I've certainly noticed this at the Half-Price Books by my house since I go there about once per week looking for clearance items I can resell in my antique booth.

After quick stops at Goodwill, Game Over Videogames, and Austin Books, which is a beautifully designed, well-stocked comic book store (where I made a TikTok video by their giant Hulk statue), we had planned to spend the afternoon swimming at our hotel, but a rainstorm blew through just as we finished up at Goodwill. We were bummed, but there was a silver lining. The temperature plummeted from the 90s down to 75, so our dinner at Hula Hut on the lake that night and our walk across South Congress Bridge to see the famous Austin Bats were extremely pleasant.

We also walked over to 6th Street, which is the hub of the night life scene in Austin, a.k.a. "The Live Music Capital of the World." Sadly, with bars closed and crowds discouraged from gathering, 6th Street was strangely quiet, with people scattered about here and there, milling around. On a typical weekend night when there's no virus to worry about, there are people everywhere, laughing, talking, drinking, acting crazy, and listening to a variety of rock, rap, pop, and country bands. Despite this palpable absence, we had a nice walk, and we made the obligatory stop at Voodoo Doughnut, where I got my usual Memphis Mafia, a dangerously delectable monstrosity comprised of "fried dough with banana chunks and cinnamon covered in a glaze with chocolate frosting, peanut butter, peanuts and chocolate chips on top." Elvis would've loved it.

All in all, it was a great time to leave town since I had been chained to my desk for weeks on end, wrapping up my latest book. However, we were reminded most every step of the way that we were still in the middle of a pandemic, what with all the mask wearing, the lack of live music, and the social distancing. One reprieve was a nice four-hour visit to Lake Whitney on the way home from Austin—plenty of space and zero signs that there was anything going on other than sunshine, swimming, and enjoying nature.

I hope this difficult time finds you safe and healthy. If you get a chance, go on a short road trip or two and have some fun. My wife and I certainly did. Just remember to bring some comfy face masks.

Planning a trip? Event Finder can help you locate auctions and shows. All events listed under the Event Finder heading are advertised in this issue of AntiqueWeek. Events are listed by state, then by town with a brief description of the event, the opening date and finally the page number where the ad can be located.

Event Finder is only for advertised events. Auctioneers and show managers who want to be listed in our free calendar listings may continue to do so. Those free listings will be contained in the Auction or Show calendar sections.

While we have taken great care in compiling the information shown here, we strongly urge you to call the auctioneer or show manager listed for the event in case of cancellations or postponements. We also encourage auctioneers and show managers to contact us with any changes to their schedule. AntiqueWeek is not responsible for errors or omissions.

> Key to page numbers: N = National Section;

B = Second Section of the Paper

Calendars can also be searched online at www.antiqueweek.com. For advertising information please call 800-876-5133 ext. 133 or e-mail dshelton@antiqueweek.com

Please report late delivery

AntiqueWeek strives to provide customers with the best delivery possible. Occasionally, areas of the country do not receive timely delivery of the paper. The goal of AntiqueWeek's late delivery staff is to work with the USPS to get your paper to you - on time, every time. If your paper is not delivered on or before the issue date, please let us know.

These areas experienced late delivery reports during the week of July 28, 2020:

These areas experienced multiple reports of late deliveries: Indiana, Ohio and

No states reported single reports of late delivery for the same week.

Due to the high volume of calls we receive on a weekly basis, we are publishing some phone numbers for the USPS. We encourage you to call them and let them know how their recent changes have impacted your delivery. Debra Benn: (317) 870-8244, Tracey Murphy: (317) 870-8238, Deborah Samuels: (317) 870-8245, Lynn Seymour: (317) 870-8263

Our staff members will continue to address the late delivery reports we receive. We are constantly striving to rectify the late delivery problem. Please call our customer care center at (800) 876-5133 or email subscriptions@antiqueweek.com to report late delivery. Continue to report delivery issues if problems are not fixed after the first call so staff members can continue to report these difficulties to the USPS

In order to ensure everyone can see the paper on time, AntiqueWeek uploads each issue every Saturday morning to its website. The online issue is free to subscribers and totally keyword searchable. Visit www.antiqueweek.com.

View-Master

gained the license to all of Walt Disney's characters and was permitted to use cel-style drawings from the actual films. Suddenly, the device had tremendous kid appear, and movies and TV characters became a staple of the View-Master line. Such nostalgic names as Captain Kangaroo, Pinky Lee, Mouseketeers, Roy Rogers, Flipper, The Monkees and The Beatles have all been recorded on these reels.

The View-Master product line was long. The Model D viewer was produced in the early 1950s and was available until the early 1970s.

Model E was introduced in 1955 with a more modern design, big ivory buttons on the picture changer levers, and a large "V" slot on top for easier reel insertion. It was released in brown and black. It was four inches high, five inches wide and four inches deep.

Model F was introduced in 1958. It used batteries to power an internal lighting source, and led to an even more elaborate viewer in the Model F. Model G was the most prevalent. In 1962, the Bakelite models were replaced with lightweight thermoplastics, the first of which was the Model G.

"Most View-Masters viewers are remarkably common, so only the earliest models, like Model A and Model B, have any value on the market," Hensley said. "The blue-and-brown Model Bs are particularly scarce. Model D is coveted because it's the only viewer in the line with a focusing feature. The black Bakelite Model C, however, has proven indestructible and therefore, is easy to find.

In 1955, View-Master introduced three-reel packets, which often came with storybooks, and began phasing single reels out.

During the 1950s, when 3-D movies were all the rage, View-Masters would be placed in movie theater lobbies, loaded with preview reels of upcoming features. Moviegoers would look through the viewers to get a taste of 3-D films like "House of Wax" with Vincent Price, "They Called Him Hondo" with John Wayne, and "It Came From Outer Space" with Richard Carlson.

"Only 29 films were previewed this way, so these reels are now hot items for collectors of View-Master," Hensley said. A "House of Wax" reel recently sold for $400."

View-Master was eventually purchased by General Aniline and Film, or GAF, in 1966. G.A.F. pushed through several View-Master innovations, including the "talking" View-Master and View-Master projectors. The 1969 Apollo moon landing was also depicted in a View-Master reel.

"Reels made between 1960 and 1963 often had a blistering or bubbling effect on the paper that occurred in manufacturing," Hensley said. "However, the real concern for collectors is if the film is damaged or missing, the reel can be deemed worthless."

View-Master dipped in popularity in the '70s.

By 1980, View-Master released the Show Beam Projector, a toy that combined the company's stereoscopic images and flashlight technology to produce a portable hand-held projector. The Show Beam used small film cartridges that were plugged into the side of the toy. Each cartridge contained 30 full-color images.

The ownership trail continued and in 1981, GAF sold View-Master to a group of investors who reconstituted themselves as View-Master International Group, or VMI. VMI acquired the Ideal Toy Company in 1984 and became known as the View-Master Ideal Group. V-M Ideal was purchased by Tyco Toys in 1989. Tyco merged with Mattel Inc. in 1997. V-M was placed organizationally in Mattel's pre-school division and is now marketed under the Fisher-Price imprint, which continues emphasis on juvenile content.

In 1999, the View-Master was inducted into the Toy Hall of Fame. At this point in time, more than 1.5 million View-Master reels had been produced.

In 2009, Fishear-Price announced that it had stopped production of the scenic reels depicting tourist attractions.

"Not too many young people see the fascination with these, but the Baby Boomers remember them well and want to latch on to their past," Hensley said. "What I'm seeing out there is a surge in those collecting the round reels themselves. I can't tell you how many times I've had people ask me if I had reels relating to Mickey Mouse, Barbie and Batman."

Hensley says that TV shows of the '60s like "Lost in Space," "The Munsters," and "Adams Family" are particularly popular with collectors these days. He added that reels of "Star Trek", "Here's Lucy", The Beverly Hillbillies", and "Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In" are coveted piec-

"Reels of popular movies and TV shows are hot items," Hensley said. "Often failed TV shows would end up as View-Master reels.

Above: "Warning, Warning Will Robinson." Who can ever forget the series "Lost in Space". Movie reels such as this one fetch a high price at any antique venue.
