A-tisket, a-tasket, let's pack a picnic basket

BY BARBARA MILLER BEEM

Celebrated in art (James Tissot's Holyday) and music ("Teddy Bears' Picnic"), film (The Sound of Music) and literature (Jane Austen's Emma), picnics combine good food and good company, providing a change of scenery and a change of pace. There can be no doubt that a meal carefully packed in a basket is a culinary gift of love, and a natural setting and a breath of fresh air make everything taste better. In these days of social distancing, when eating out is governed by new rules, picnics are one pleasure that has not been denied. Even though the calendar says "September," there's still time to savor a picnic meal. And as it turns out, vintage picnic baskets, the perfect complement to a gracious outing, are affordable and available.

"There are few things so pleasant as a picnic eaten in perfect comfort." (W. Somerset Maugham)

Eating outdoors is nothing new, but the earliest meals were literally no picnic, and certainly not what we would glamorize as al fresco. Fast forward to the 18th century, when European aristocrats socialized at what they called "pique-niques," indoor festivities that were an upscale version of a covered-dish meal, accompanied by entertainment and dancing.

It wasn't until the following century that the term was anglicized to "picnic" and the meal was moved outdoors; in England, it was romanticized as a way to commune

Barnhart auction will be a lifetime of memories

By Eric C. Rodenberg

READING, Mich. – In the early morning shadows of the large red barn with a white heart prominently painted on its sides, an element of auctioneering lore and history will come to an end.

On Sept. 19 at 10 a.m., Spieth and Satow Auctions Inc. will be selling the estate of Martin "Barney" Barnhart and his late wife, Ruby, in what promises to be a marathon of an auction.

Barnhart, who was America's oldest practicing auctioneer until he died in June 2019 at the age of 98, left a "lifetime collection of darn near everything," according to Darin Spieth, co-owner of Spieth and Satow Auctions.

Spieth should know: He was Barnhart's business partner for about 10 years and Barnhart "was one of my mentors." The auction has innumerable lots, old tractors (all in running condition), walking sticks, an extensive collection of pig memorabilia and many items bordering on the arcane and unusual.

"I can't tell you how many lots we'll be selling; it's way beyond counting," Spieth says. "But we're going to have two rings going all day. We'll be selling right at 10 hours and it will be fast paced. I'll be selling an item every 42 seconds ... that's the way Barney would have wanted it."

There will be no phone or Internet bidders. "We don't operate that way, if you want to buy something you show up on auction day."

Again, Spieth's old partner and mentor would have agreed. It's their philosophy, that an auction can only be defined as a gathering of a live group of bidders clustered around an auctioneer. That way, the "true" market value is established.

It was the excitement of the crowd and the precise chant of the auctioneer that initially captivated a young Barney Barnhart, who attended Belgian draft horse auctions with his father in the late 1920s and early 1930s. Raised on the family farm, he was adept at harnessing a pair of Belgians early in the morning for a day in the field. Throughout much of the day, he worked on his chant, "selling" the pair as he steadily plodded behind the animals.

"He would "sell" his sisters' dolls," according to his daughter, Penny Carothers. "He loved his farm and he loved auctioning. He worked hard to get the best prices for his consigners, and he was honest ... almost to a fault."

He was also very much a "people" person. He always arrived early at his auctions to mingle with the crowd before stepping up to the auction block. He volunteered to call

Votes for Women: Portrait of Persistence

EAST HAMPTON, N.Y. — On Sept.19 the East Hampton Historical Society will host a one-day exhibition at Clinton Academy entitled Votes for Women: A Portrait of Persistence. This poster exhibition from the Smithsonian Institution is based on their larger installation and marks the 100th anniversary of women's right to vote, made possible through the passage of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The exhibit will be supplemented with objects from our own East Hampton suffrage story.

In addition, the East Hampton Historical Society will welcome the League of Women Voters of East Hampton, Shelter Island, and the North Fork to the exhibit to offer voter registration.

Admission is free, but pre-registration is required at www.easthamptonhistory.org.

"It's the responsibility of the Society to share East Hampton history and our East End suffrage story as just one part of the larger struggle for women to gain the right to vote nationally," said Maria Vann, executive Director.

"We did not want this challenging year to prevent us from marking this historic anniversary and sharing what we could with the community about this important narrative of women's tenacious spirit and fortitude to be enfranchised."

The Smithsonian's scripted panels will be augmented with several dozen historic photographs that illustrate both Long Island suffragist parades and activities as well as events in New York City and Washington DC.

Bingo at a patient rehabilitation clinic, was on hand all his life to help 4-H kids sell their animals and loved to sing. "His favorite song was "It's A Wonderful World," Carothers said.

He was known throughout southern Michigan, Indiana and Ohio, his farm within a few miles of both contiguous states. He also auctioned in Texas, Minnesota, Florida and other states.

In the biting cold of winter, the 5-foot, 8-inch auctioneer who tipped the scales at about 125 pounds would don a full-length black bear coat to keep warm. He was a little man who lived to bring joy into his life and others. Every Christmas season he couldn't wait to put his slight frame into a Santa suit to the delight of his five children, five grandchildren and five great-grandchldren.

He was always an animal lover. "I remember, at one point, we had 37 cats. Some hung around the milk parlor, others stayed around the pig pen and several remained around the house," his daughter said. "He had a name for every one of the cats. His animals became more like pets, each of course named, rather than just farm animals.'

Barney Barnhart had that special "charisma," according to his daughter. The diminutive man wrapped up in a bear coat, pointing to bidders with a walking stick and steadily calling bids through the biting wind, was a subject of lore in auctioneer circles.

One widely spread story tells of just one of his "heroic" deeds at the auction block. His partner Spieth was a witness to the event, verifying this oft-told story. "We were up in the Brainard area of Minnesota," Spieth recalled. "It was a big auction. We were selling an entire logging town, including a bank and jail.

"During the auction someone stepped on a chipmunk. I thought it was a goner. But Barney stepped out, took up that chipmunk and began giving it mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. It was totally unreal. It took awhile for the animal to respond, but it finally came back to life, scrambled out of Barney's hands and went up a tree."

The bidders' applause was befitting to the fun he had before a crowd.

Widely known and respected, Barnhart was inducted into the Michigan Auctioneers Association Hall of Fame in 2014. He had also earned the association's Lifetime Achievement Award. He was the only auctioneer to receive both honors.

During his formative years on the farm, he had also showed in 4-H the Grand Champion Belgian filly and Grand Champion Chester White barrow at the Michigan State Fair.

"I learned a lot from Barney," Spieth says. "He had an incredible work ethic. He would conduct three or four auctions a week for 50 years. While he was auctioning, Ruby took care of the farm and the animals. They both worked seven days a week on the farm, feeding, milking and taking care of the cattle. He was witty, funny and took pride in selling. He was definitely old school. He was tough; he could stand to the fire."

Barnhart lived on the family farm, where he was born, nearly all his life. He and his late wife, Ruby, raised five children on the farm. Prior to that, his parents lived their whole lives on the now 214-acre farm.

"In this auction, there's an accumulation of items that go back 175 to 180 years," Spieth said. "There are firearms, tons of farm equipment and lots of antiques and primitives. There has to be something here for everyone."

As well known as Barnhart was, Spieth is expecting a big turnout for the Sept. 19 sale.

"He was a beloved, colorful character," he said. "He just fell into love with the chant, the people and the excitement that auctions offer. He brought a lot of love and passion to the business and was always ready to help others."

Invariably dressed in a high crowned fedora and necktie, with a walking stick in hand, the late Michigan auctioneer began each auction with the announcement: "We come today as friends and we will leave today as friends."

It was with that that oft-spoken sentiment, that the little man with a heart as big as the one painted on his barn, departed the auctioneer ring.

Elephant head table not really that unusual

RINKER ON COLLECTIBLES

BY HARRY L. RINKER

Q I have a very unusual antique table whose legs are carved elephant heads. I have shown it to a few antique dealers. They told me they have never seen anything like it before. What are your suggestions? As an aside, I am in my early 20s but always say I was born in the wrong era. I LOVE antiques; and, my home is full of unusual treasures.

A I am afraid the dealers to whom you showed the table were not completely honest. Unless they are fairly new to the trade, they most certainly knew the origins of your table.

"I have never seen one of those" or some variation of this phrase is a polite way of avoiding dealing with a question in the trade whose answer is most likely to disappoint the asker. The antiques and collectibles trade is a good news business. It is best to avoid bad news whenever possible.

A WorthPoint.com "table with elephant head leg" search revealed 176 listings. There were dozens of elephant head leg variations, most carved from wood but some made from cast iron. The quality varied from outright ugly to kind-of-nice. Table tops varied from round to rectangular, almost always with chamfered corners.

There are three time periods for these elephant head leg tables. The first is the last decade of the 19th century and the first decade of the 20th century. The second is the late 1920s and early 1930s. Tables from these first two periods demonstrate a modicum of quality.

The third period is the 1950s and early 1960s when cheap Southeast Asia carved furniture flooded the American discount furniture market, the era of the movies "The King and I" (1956) and "South Pacific" (1958) and the Tiki Bar. The furniture was crudely carved and often cracked as it aged.

I did not find an exact match for your elephant leg table on WorthPoint.com. I suspect the absence is due to the fact that buyers for 1950s/early 1960s Southeast Asian carved furniture are minimal.

In the good news department, not everyone owns one and the table is definitely a conversation starter. Secondary market values are all over the map. Although you did not provide a size in your email, it appears your table is an end or occasional table. A fair secondary market value is between $70 and $90, albeit its buyer's appeal is limited.

Q I have a pair of 16-inch high candlesticks that were inherited from my husband's grandmother. On the bottom is a sticker that reads: "The Armor Bronze Company / New York." I have tried giving them away. My children refused to take them. Is it worth trying to sell them?

A My concern is that your candlesticks were once plated with a bronze or other coating which has been lost due to excessive cleaning. It is hard to determine the exact condition from the images that accompanied your email.

The Smithsonian Library has scanned the National Metalizing Company 1900 catalog of "Book Ends, Door Stops, Art Objects, and Table and Floor Lamps." Armor Bronze was its marketing brand. (See https://library.si.edu/digital-library/book/armorbronzeartis00nati). The catalog did not contain any candlesticks, although several of the lamp bases were close matches for the pair of candlesticks you own.

I checked WorthPoint.com. At 16-inch high, your candlesticks are almost too tall for a table or dining room sideboard but too short for use on an altar. They might work in a funeral parlor or lodge hall. WorthPoint.com has a few listings for altar size Amor Bronze candlesticks. The only tabletop pair sold through on eBay for $15.50 on June 10, 2012. The lack of listings means one thing – the absence of a viable secondary market for any form of Amor Bronze candlesticks.

Clearly, you do not want to send your pair of candlesticks to the landfill, although it is a viable option. Donate them to a local charitable organization such as Goodwill or the Salvation Army. The organization will decide if the candlesticks' value is scrap or resale. Meanwhile, your problem of what to do with them has gone away.

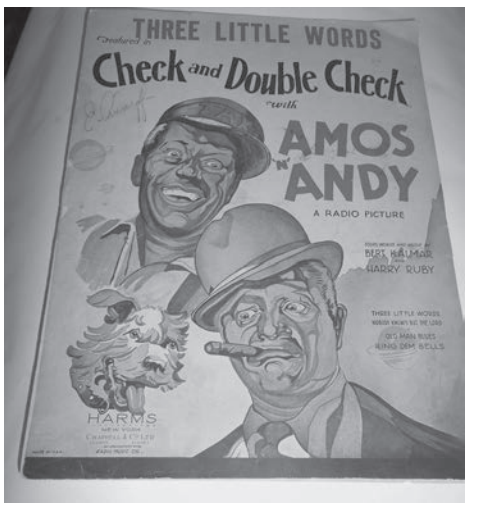

Q I purchased a flat containing paper ephemera at an auction in Illinois. Two Amos 'n Andy radio items were among the papers in the flat. The first is a printed copy of a 1935 Amos 'n Andy radio episode entitled "Amos' Wedding." The cover features a signed picture of Amos 'n Andy. Inside is a printed letter that begins "YOUR OWN / AUTOGRAPHED COPY." I feel certain the signatures are printed as part of the picture. The period envelope also was present. The second is a five-page Amos 'n Andy song book (sheet music) featuring music from "Three Little Words: Check and Double Check," an Amos 'n Andy movie released by RKO Radio Pictures. There is a hand-written signature, albeit not the name of either individual who portrayed Amos 'n Andy, in the upper left quadrant. Any information on these two items would be much appreciated.

A Freeman Gosden and Charles Cornell, two white actors, wrote and voiced the Amos 'n Andy radio show. The show concept initially aired on WGN as "Sam 'n Harry" beginning on Jan. 12, 1926. When WGN refused to distribute the show nationally on records, Gosden and Cornell did a last broadcast on Jan. 29, 1928.

WMAQ, the "Chicago Dailey News" station talked with Gosden and Cornell about creating a new show similar to Sam 'n Harry. Amos 'n Andy aired from March 19, 1928 to Nov. 25, 1960. Gosden voiced Amos Jones and Cornell that of Andrew Hogg Brown. Together, they created and voiced over 170 male characters. Amos 'n Andy was a nightly radio series from 1928 to 1943, a weekly situation comedy from 1943-1955, and a nightly disc-jockey program from 1954-1960. Gosden and Cornell recorded the show on 78rpm discs. By 1929, over 70 United States radio stations carried the show. Early 1930s programs originated from the El Mirador Hotel in Palm Springs, Calif.

Chief sponsors were Pepsodent toothpaste (1929-1937), Campbell's Soup (1937-1943), Rinso detergent (1941-1950), Rexall drugstore (1950-1954), and Columbia television sets (1954-1955).

The Amos 'n Andy show generated a number of premiums. The printed booklet entitled "An Amos 'n Andy Radio Episode: 'Amos' Wedding'" that contained information about Amos 'n Andy, the script of episode No. 2225 that aired on Dec. 25, 1935, a portion of the script that was not aired, and a cover with a picture of Amos and Andy with a printed facsimile signature was a Pepsodent toothpaste premium. The attribution is beneath the return address on the enveloped.

The Pepsodent premium is common. Examples appear regularly. Recent sell through prices as listed on WorthPoint.com range from $12 to $15.. Occasionally, an example will sell for double these prices, obviously to a buyer who has no patience or desire to comparison shop.

The five-page, "Check and Double Check" song book is from a 1930 RKO Radio Picture starring Charles Correll and Freeman Gosden. The movie also featured Duke Ellington and his "Cotton Club Band."

The signature on the cover is period, but most likely that of the owner of the song book. Song book and sheet music often was loaned to friends. Owners wrote their name on the cover to make certain the song book or sheet music was returned.

The value for your song book is between $12 and $15.

After several delays, Old Barn gets clearance for auction

By Kathleen L. Floyd

FINDLAY, Ohio — Old Barn Auction surged back to life on June 5-6, after a two and a half month shutdown due to Covid-19. It was a long and challenging recovery period, but the auction house emerged stronger and more resilient than ever.

Vicky Sorgenfrei, Old Barn owner and manager, said the two-day antique gun, knife and military auction, was originally scheduled for April 10-11. "We had just sent out the catalogs for the sale and the next day, they shut us down," she said.

Starting on March 12, when the governor closed all of Ohio's K-12 public schools, the rest of the month brought new closures and restrictions each day. Sorgenfrei could see there was no way her traditional, in-person gun auction could take place in April. She notified bidders to watch for a new date, while she set out to try to make it happen.

She would have presented the auction exclusively online, but the online platform she had always used, did not permit the sale of modern firearms. That might not sound like a problem for a sale of antique guns, but Old Barn's gun consultant, Calvin Withrow, explained the issue. "Probably 50 to 60 percent of the guns we sell are classified as modern firearms, even though they may be 120 years old," he said. Federal regulations use 1899, the year of the first smokeless powder, to mark the beginning of modern firearms, he clarified.

In order to list all 1,400 lots on the internet, Sorgenfrei switched to Invaluable, the online auction platform. The website breathed life into her gun auction, but she still wanted to have in-person bidding and previews, in addition to online sales. Unfortunately, that meant waiting for the end of the shutdown.

It was a long wait, but at last the announcement came: all retail businesses could reopen May 12, under strict guidelines. Sorgenfrei was optimistic for the first time since she mailed her auction catalogs. She rescheduled the auction for May 31, and called the local health department for the reopening procedures.

That's when she hit a major roadblock. Ohio's Covid regulations regarding auction houses were not spelled out specifically, but she was told she couldn't reopen with the retail group. Even bars and restaurants were permitted to open for socially-distanced indoor dining on May 21, but Old Barn's spacious gallery, which has a normal occupancy of 250 people, was limited to gatherings of only 10. In frustration, Sorgenfrei delayed the auction again.

More determined than ever, she contacted auctioneers in other parts of the state who had dealt with similar problems. Eventually she received confirmation her auction house was considered a retail business which could reopen. The governor also announced further easing of business restrictions starting on June 1. She scheduled the gun sale for June 5-6, and it was full speed ahead from there.

Sorgenfrei and her team readied the gallery with typical Covid modifications. Chairs were distanced with a seating capacity of 100. Plexiglass was installed at the cashiers' windows. Sanitization was emphasized and staff members were required to wear masks. At the time of the previews, only 10 people were permitted in the gallery at a time, so additional preview days were added for bidders who requested appointments. "The previews went really well," Sorgenfrei remarked with relief.

Finally, on June 5, when the auctioneer's familiar chant sounded throughout the building, it was clear that Old Barn was alive and well. Bidders were especially ready and eager, after having three months to study their catalogs. As always, auctioneers, Dave Wedertz and Gregg Fox, rapidly took bids from in-person, absentee and online bidders. The staff also managed 10 phone lines to accommodate bids.

When the leading item came up for bid, Covid was pushed to the back of everyone's mind. The flintlock long rifle was made and signed by H. Gibbs in Lancaster, Pa. With a curly maple stock and some engraving, the .46 caliber rifle with its hefty 44-inch barrel, appealed to many collectors. But for one phone bidder, it was a family heirloom. A descendent of Gibbs, bought the historic gun for $10,450. Another sale highlight was a .32 caliber Smith & Wesson revolver with a three-inch barrel. The hard-to-find revolver was fully engraved and featured ornate silver grips, by Tiffany & Co. Paris. In good condition, it reached $6,600.

Other collectors relished the chance to bid on a group of 39 World War I and World War II trench knives. They came from the late Dr. Kuhl, of Ann Arbor, Mich., who was a respected author and expert on the subject. Most of the knives sold between $1,000 and $2,000, but a small World War II knuckle knife, made by Gregory Steel Products in Australia, outsold the others when it hit $4,400.

After the sale, Sorgenfrei said the Invaluable platform lived up to its name. It was easy to use and the auction ran smoothly. It brought more than 1,500 registered online bidders and delivered successful results. What's more, it convinced Vicky Sorgenfrei, she can always forgo the traditional auction format if necessary, and rely on Invaluable to make her future sales pandemic-proof.

Above: A highlight of Old Barn Auction's recent sale, this flintlock long rifle had a curly maple stock and a 44-inch barrel which was signed by gunsmith, H. Gibbs, from Lancaster, Pa. A descendent of Gibbs bought it as a family heirloom for $10,450.

Above: In a wooden case with an inlaid cross, this vintage vampire-killing kit contained all of the legendary essentials, such as a wooden stake, percussion pistol, knife, mirror, crosses, potion bottles and a Bible. It sold at Old Barn for $2,750.

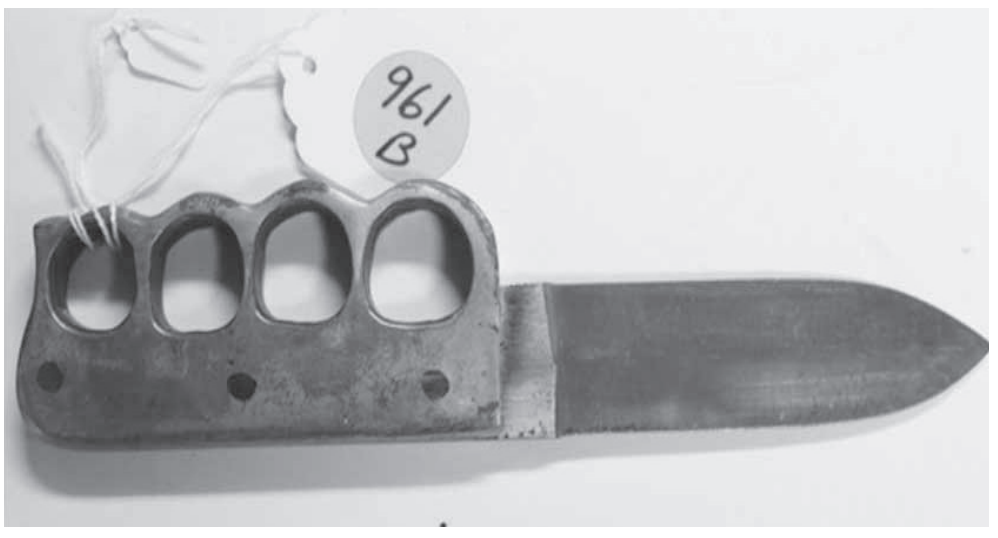

Above: Most of these knives sold in the $1,000 to $2,000 range. They were among 39 trench knives presented at Old Barn from the collection of the late Dr. Kuhl, who was an authority on the subject.

Below: It's barrel was only 3 inches long, but no one could miss this .32 caliber Smith & Wesson revolver which was fully engraved and featured ornate silver grips by Tiffany & Co. Paris. It shot to $6,600 at Old Barn.

Below: Collectors of trench knives at Old Barn competed for this World War II knuckle knife made by Gregory Steel Products in Australia. Its spear blade was a little over five inches long and struck $4,400.

Sinclair porcelain sign pumped up a $12,100 bid

By Pete Prunkl

WOLCOTTEVILLE, Ind. — Richard Cripe (1932-2019) was that unique high school shop teacher who could fix your car and your outlook on life. His dual master's degree in industrial arts and counseling qualified him for both types of repairs. Cripe also collected antique autos and Sinclair Oil maps, handbooks, signs, shirts, caps, oil cans, mugs, promotions, toy trucks, pumps and bug sprayers. His family chose Strawser Auctions to disperse his collections on Aug. 1.

"We reached out to Sinclair and petroliana collectors," said auctioneer and owner Michael Strawser. Outreach brought results. Two days before the sale, several high dollar lots that Strawser saved for the end of the 376-lot sale, had already exceed their high estimate.

No phone or absentee bidders participated, but there were 150 highly competitive onsite bidders in the Strawser gallery. LiveAuctioneers supplied a whopping 620 registered bidders.

The top lot of the sale was a two-sided 36-inch diameter Sinclair porcelain sign with frame. The near mint condition sign sold to a floor bidder for $12,100. Only one bidder on Liveauctioneers joined the chase. Selling prices for lots that sold onsite include a 10 percent buyer's premium. For everything purchased on LiveAuctioneer, the premium was 18 percent.

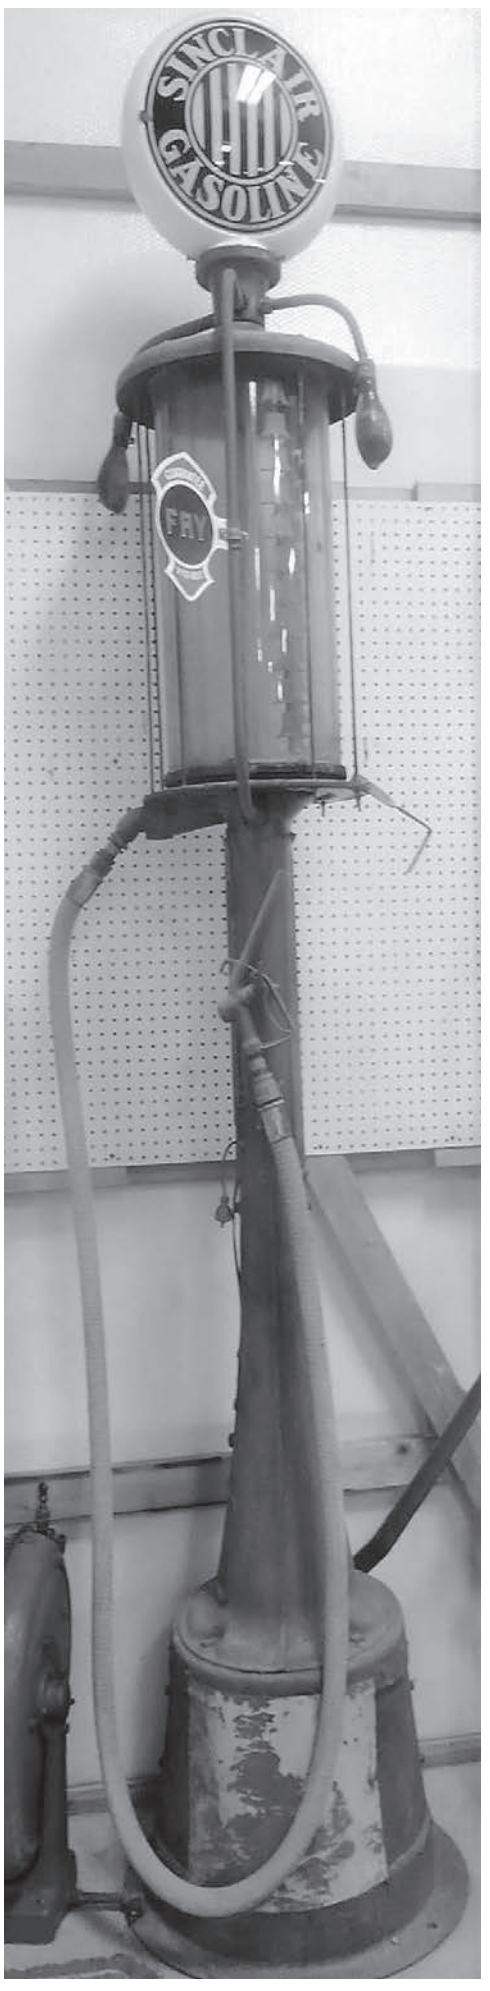

The top oil can was a 5-gallon Sinclair Opaline rocker can in pristine condition. The circa 1930 14 ½ inch diameter can with intact cap and rocker base sold to an internet bidder for $2,006. The top gas pump was a Sinclair 10-gallon visible pump manufactured by Fry during the 1920s. The pump sold to a floor bidder for $3,850.

Even Sinclair attendant caps were in demand. Internet and floor bidders jockeyed for the lead in a race that started at $15 and ended at

See Strawser, page 12

Right: Early bidding gave this 36-inch two-sided near-mint Sinclair sign a $5,000 opening bid. It was the top lot at $12,100.

Above: Automobile owners could see every drop that went into their cars thanks to this visible pump for Sinclair by the Fry company. The 10-gallon pump sold for $3,850.

$330 for a black and white cap with a Sinclair logo.

Non-Sinclair items also did well. The top vehicle was a 1953 military equipped Willys Jeep that induced a battle between an internet bidder and an equally determined onsite competitor. The floor bidder prevailed at $8,800. The second and third best vehicles were Fords in good running condition. A 1930 Model A two-door coupe went to a floor bidder for $7,700 and an internet bidder bought the 1926 Model T for $7,080.

A 1908 Michigan leather license tag with leather straps and brass tag sold to a bidder on Liveauctioneers for $1,888.

Eleven days after the petroliana sale, the Strawser team traveled to Dick Cripe's hometown of Centerville, Mich., to disperse his personal effects and the Victorian house he shared with his late wife Doris.

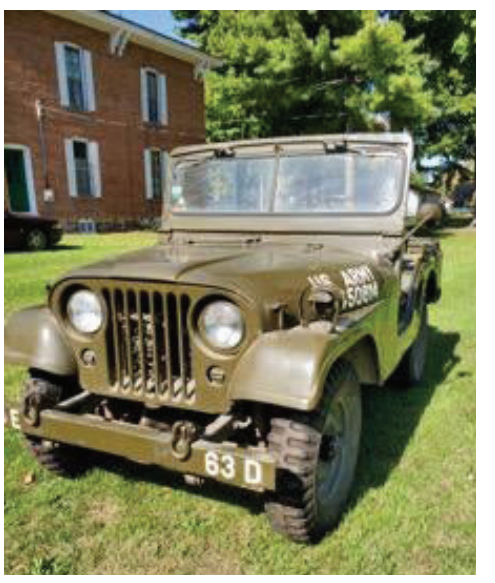

For more information, visit the website www.strawserauctions.com or call 260-854-2859. The office address is 260 North Main Street, Wolcottville, IN 46795.

Above: Sinclair attendants filled the tank, washed the windshield, and checked the oil wearing one of these cool motorcycle-style caps that sold for $330.

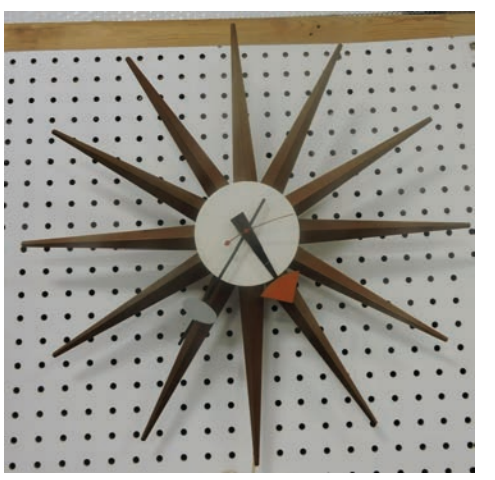

Above: In 1908 Michigan license plates were leather like this one that brought a whopping $1,888.

Above: This restored 1953 Willys Jeep went to a bidder in the Strawser gallery for $8,800.

Above: This 1926 Ford Model T sold for $6,000

Hey, Hey it's the Monkeemobile

By Eric Bryan

The Monkees American TV series was inspired by the Beatles films A Hard Day's Night and Help! Running from 1966 to 1968, this crazy 1960s comedy about a pop group featured some great music and imaginative skits.

The Monkees got around town in their Monkeemobile, a fire engine red custom Pontiac GTO, which even included a drag chute/air brake. This custom car featured a futuristically-modified body front and rear, an angled split windshield, a convertible hood, and front and rear bucket seats plus a third-row bench seat.

Dean Jeffries, who was a contractor for MPC (Model Products Corporation), the plastic kits company, was commissioned to design the Monkeemobile. Connections with Pontiac resulted in the delivery of two 1966 GTOs for conversion. One of these cars was for promotional purposes; the other was for use in the TV series, though both appeared in the show.

Jeffries and his team completed the cars in a month. The first vehicle had a rigidly-mounted rear axle without springs, a 6-71 supercharged engine, and a weighted back end. This created a car which was an overpowered, hard to control, wheelie-popping monster. To tone things down, the makers fitted a mock blower in place of the former genuine one.

Model Products Corporation leaped on this golden opportunity and created a Monkeemobile plastic kit based on Jeffries' design. With the popularity not only of the TV program, but of the Monkees' charting singles and albums, this proved to be a bonanza, with MPC selling more than seven million Monkeemobile model kits.

Airfix also did a kit version of the Monkeemobile. With boxes showing a copyright year of 1967, this 1:24 scale plastic kit appeared in 1968 and 1969 Airfix catalogs as No. 831. Some sources note that the Airfix was a reissue of the MPC kit, No. 605-200, and was available from 1967-70.

1968 was a landmark year for British diecast maker Corgi Toys, with the release of three world-famous TV/film-related Corgi models. These were the No. 270 James Bond Aston Martin DB5, the No. 266 Chitty Chitty Bang Bang, and the No. 277 Monkeemobile.

The Corgi incarnation of this specialty car (introduced in December) had a cutaway hood displaying the chromed supercharged motor, chromed exhaust pipes protruding from the front wheel wells, and the distinctively angular GTO front with chromed grille. The model had special wide rear tires, a faux parachute break system, four Monkees figures seated inside, and the iconic Monkees guitar-shaped logo on the doors. Corgi finally withdrew the No. 277 in 1972. Corgi brought back the Monkeemobile in 2001 as No. CC52405 in its Corgi Classics series. This was a replica of the original 277, though without the seated Monkees figures.

Corgi produced the Monkeemobile in a junior size in its Husky Extra range as No. 1204. Debuting in 1968, this Husky was quite a detailed scaled-down model of its Corgi big brother, complete with seated Monkees figures. This model continued as No. 1004 and lasted into the Corgi Juniors series in 1970, then subsequently into the Corgi Juniors Whizzwheels range.

Japanese tin toy maker Aoshin Co Ltd created a friction-powered Monkeemobile in 1967. This was an open-topped car with Monkees figures seated inside along with some musical instruments. They were made to appear to play a song via a battery-operated recording: If you pressed a button in the center seat, the music would play through a speaker concealed beneath the front seat. This Monkeemobile was in red, but AA Idols in Greece copied Aoshin's model in yellow and possibly in other colors.

If you happened to eat Post Cereals or drink Kool-Aid in North America in the 1970-71 period, you could have collected proof-of-purchase box tops to send off for a Remco Monkeemobile. Like the Husky model this car was made in the 1:64 scale range, and though the miniature didn't include any Monkees figures, you could collect this car in several colors: the familiar red, green, yellow, and blue. Your very own pocket-sized Monkeemobile would be delivered to your door in a plain cardboard box.

Here is the Corgi pre-production Monkeemobile, made with plastic and resin, which realized $525 at auction. Photo by Vectis

In their Hollywood on Wheels series, Johnny Lightning brought out their own Monkeemobile in 1998. Released as No. 431-00, this model was made both with and without the Monkees logo on the doors, had rubber tires, and was packaged with a Monkees collector's card. Johnny Lightning later issued the Monkeemobile in a set with a Monkees Volkswagen van and four separate free-standing Monkees figures.

In 2002 Ertl presented its newly-tooled 1:18 scale diecast Monkeemobile. Released as No. 33150, this was a fairly thorough model with a removable top, steerable front wheels, detailed engine and exhausts and opening hood. The car had tan interior (which matched the top), a chromed gearshift lever, a dashboard with four dials and steering wheel. Ertl ceased production of the 33150 due to a licensing issue, and then rereleased its Monkeemobile as No. 33398 with an accompanying certificate of authenticity. Ertl produced 100 of the 33398s as gold-plated models.

Monkeemobile

AutoWorld did another version of the Monkeemobile in 1:18 scale in 2011, issued as No. AMM957. The most obvious difference between this model and the Ertl is that the AutoWorld car was given a white top and interior. This Monkeemobile also included a more comprehensive dashboard, flock carpeting, gold-painted detailing on the supercharger, a precisely-done grille and an extensive undercarriage. AutoWorld followed up in 2012 with No. SCM001, a limited edition of the Monkeemobile with a production number of 200. This model had no logos on the doors.

Returning to our vintage originals, the Husky Monkeemobile has fetched up to $330 at auction. The No. 277 Monkeemobile is one of Corgi's most famous and coveted collectibles. It has been auctioned for up to at least $430, and some mint examples with rare packaging or display materials have gone for $1,000 and occasionally much more.

Basket

with nature, and, later, in America, it provided a refuge from everyday life. The term "picnic basket" entered the lexicon in 1857, "picnic table" (originally a folding table) was coined the following year, and, in 1903, C.H. Nielsen applied for a patent for his iconic (and still popular) table with attached benches. With the advent of cars, some of which were sold equipped with picnic hampers, meals intended to be enjoyed at a destination, grew in popularity.

"Hey, Boo Boo, let's go get a pic-a-nic basket." (Yogi Bear)

Because presentation is everything, a moveable feast requires a proper conveyance. For early picnickers who could afford them, hamper-style baskets were the baskets of choice among the upper classes, according to Diana Petrillo, an antique collector, dealer, and blogger (and more). Resembling wicker suitcases, these hampers were rectangular in shape and featured a hinged top and interior compartments for the fine items they held. "Hampers could be purchased with all the accoutrements of picnicking, tablewares and tablecloth, or even filled to the brim with picnic delicacies, like goose, an array of cheese, and bread and wine to drink," noted Petrillo. Similar baskets can still be purchased, she added, notably at Harrods in London.

But picnicking did not need to be a luxury. For those simpler folk living in the 19th and early-20th centuries, dining outdoors required little more than food and drink, packed in any basket that was handy, not one saved specifically for that purpose. Petrillo suggested an easily carried market basket layered with goodies and topped with a towel or tablecloth to protect it from insects and the elements would serve this function.

These days, when people consider vintage picnic baskets, they're probably thinking about a design introduced in the 1940s, one with double handles and an attached hinged wooden lid. Made of oak and sometimes, ash, these wood-splint baskets were partially handmade, partially machine made, according to Petrillo. She named Basketville (originally in Vermont) and the Shelton Basket Company (late of Connecticut and sometimes referred to as "The Tiffany of the Industry"), as two companies whose wares are popularly collected. Often marked, this style of basket would "regularly be outfitted with the necessary accessories: flatware, dishes, and cups," with elastic bands on the underside of the lid to keep utensils from spilling about.

Today, these wood-splint baskets are "extremely common" and "don't garner very high prices," Petrillo said. "Before 9/11, they might sell for $25 to $30," she continued. "Nowadays, expect to spend $10 or $15." Condition is seldom a problem, because they were sturdily made and seldom used. "How many picnics do you have in a year?" she asked. "Maybe one. They've survived very well."

By the end of World War II, a different kind of basket, one technically not a basket, became popular. Metal picnic "baskets" were manufactured by a number of companies with a variety of decorations. Among the most recognizable ones are those that featured Scotch plaid, sometimes bearing a printed label that read "Hoot, mon!" Others pictured Deco-inspired illustrations. Durable and effective for protecting their contents from insects and the elements, they were subject to rust, but can still be purchased online and at antique malls and flea markets. Matching coolers and thermoses can also be found.

And then there are the baskets made by the Longaberger Company, whose wares, popular beginning in the latter quarter of the 20th century, are now in the "vintage" category. These maplewood baskets are readily available on the secondary market. Additionally, recent licensing agreements have given the production of these baskets a new lease on life. And the ultimate picnic vacation might be spent in the company's former Newark, Ohio, headquarters, as the Longaberger Basket Building, built in the form of a picnic basket (complete with handles) is currently being renovated into a luxury hotel.

So prepare a meal, be it an English feast with salted meat and cress sandwiches topped off with fruit turnovers, or something a bit more simple. Pack it in a hamper or market basket, "old school" wood-splint or retro metal basket. Don't forget to toss in plenty of bottled water, hand sanitizer, and facemasks. And watch out for the ants.

"I've liked lots of people 'til I went on a picnic jaunt with them." (Bess Truman)
