Cornishware still brightening kitchens across the world

BY DEBORAH THREADGILL

Blue and white has always been a favorite color combination for collectors—whether it appears in a handstitched quilt, on transferware or any other surface. Cornishware is another perennial blue and white favorite. It is a line of kitchenware that has been delighting collectors since the 1920s and whose popularity has withstood the test of time.

Introduced in the 1920s by T.G. Green and Company of Church Gresley, Derbyshire, England the banded kitchenware brand was named Cornishware, because Green said the color reminded him of the sky color in Cornwall. Cornwall was also the initial source of the clay used in the manufacture of the pottery. The signature blue coloring itself was referred to as "E. Blue" and many people also referred to the line as "E.Blue."

The iconic blue banding seen on the pottery came about, in large part, due to the economic downturn in white-bodied wares after World War I. To achieve the "look", the blue, slip-decorated piece was turned on a lathe to remove bands of blue so that the white earthenware body underneath could show through. Once completed the piece was coated in clear glaze making it suitable for kitchen use.

The line of Cornishware, which started out with utilitarian pieces like mixing bowls, milk jugs and teapots grew to incorporate lettered storage jars with lids, which were sold to the public through department stores and stand-alone shops. The company allowed purchasers to custom order jars with lettering or wording of their choice to accommodate whatever food item was to be stored inside the jars. It is these custom jars that are highly prized by collectors today. Custom order jars often featured misspelled words, which adds to the charm, collectability and value for many fans. In fact, they are eagerly sought after with collectors who willingly pay top dollar to add a misspelled item to their growing collections. Research shows that many factory employees made lettered items for family and friends oftenwith the family name or other unique lettering applied and then tucked them inside a coat or other item of apparel to sneak out of the factory. These one-of-a-kind lettered items are treasured by Cornishware enthusiasts.

As time passed, additional colors were added to the iconic blue line such as red and white (extremely rare and highly collectible); yellow and white which was manufactured in 1959 and introduced at a trade show in Blackpool in February 1960 and advertised to the public in April of 1960; black and white, green and white, and orange and white to name just a few. Newer pieces such as the color combination plum and white, made in 2004 as a Christmas present for Mason and Cash employees, are few and far between in the marketplace and the gold and blue ones are so rare only a handful of collectors have ever seen an example let alone have one in their possession.

Most avid collectors focus on vintage pieces from the 1920s to the 1960s. Popular items include lettered storage jars with lids. While lettered jars for staples such as flour, sugar, salt, coffee and tea are most often seen in the marketplace and still relatively reasonably priced the crème de la crème are jars with lettering for then-expensive and then-exotic food items—for instance cloves, mustard, brown sugar, mace and cocoa. What was stored for use back then may or may not be used or even available today so aspiring collectors who have a keen knowledge of history and food history in particular are often more likely to spot a rare piece when they see one. As an example, would you know what was inside a jar labeled TREX? For those in the know, Trex is/was a vegetable fat.

Right: A contemporary red and white Cornishware milk pitcher. Vintage red and white pieces are considered extremely rare, eagerly sought after, and hard to acquire.

Dating Cornishware is a bit tricky. Backstamps were either not recorded or were used in multiple years. However, as a general guideline a shield backstamp in black ink was used from the 1930s to the 1950s. Most lidded storage jars with lettering have this backstamp. A shield mark in green ink was used from the 1930s to 1960s mostly on non-jar shapes such as milk jugs, bowls, etc. One very distinctive backstamp called a "target mark" can be definitively dated to 1968-1975. This mark shows a stamp in black ink along with the wording "Restyled by Judith Onions Des. RCA." Onions was a young designer brought in in 1968 to modernize the line.

In the 1990s a flood of fake vintage pieces started appearing at auctions, malls and online. For the most part these fakes bear a triangular backstamp containing the words "Gresley Ware" or the text-only mark "T.G. Green and Co., Gresley Ware." Neither of these backstamps were ever used in original Cornishware.

Production of the Cornishware line was, for many generations, a family run business. After T.G. Green died in 1905 the company passed to his son and business associate Henry King. The Green/King families operated the business until 1964 when, due to financial problems, it ended up in the hands of the Jersey Banking Corporation who, at one point, petitioned the local councilmen to allow for the tearing down of the old brick kilns to allow for more operational space. The request was denied by the Council. In response to the decision the banking corporation destroyed all the company paperwork including deeds and design pattern booklets. In the 1980s the factory fell into the ownership of Swinden-based Cloverleaf Pottery which later sold (due to declining sales and competition from mass produced

Garden antiques grew strong bids at Kamelot

By Susan Emerson Nutter

PHILADELPHIA — Two consistently solid collecting areas are items that are garden related and architectural anything. Combine those two categories in one auction and expect great things.

Just look at Kamelot Auctions' May 2 and May 7 online event fondly known as the Garden Sale. Celebrating the 15th installment of this very popular auction, items related to the garden or architectural elements are wonderful draws reinforcing the fact these areas never seem soft. Yet, they do have their drawbacks in a sense, and that is size. Garden urns and benches; architectural light fixtures and corbels – those can work most anywhere. Grandiose garden gates and statuary or towering stained glass windows and granite columns are another matter.

But no matter. Kamelot found new owners for material in all shapes and sizes, and in many, many instances; presale estimates were crushed. The first lot of the May 2 portion found an Italian, circa 1860, carved marble statue of a winged putto; a usable height at 25 inches tall and signed Pio Fedi, on the block. Its presale estimate of $600 to $900 was greatly surpasses when it hammered at $4,600.

The second lot of the same day, was the kinetic sculpture "Four Red Rings" by Jerome Kirk (American, b. 1923). Dated 1978 and selling with a hand-signed book, this piece of art realized $5,500. The sculpture was 46 ½ inches high by 24 inches wide and 12 inches deep.

What a great way to start an auction! And the big numbers kept

Lights and sound will dazzle the senses at Selkirk

By Eric C. Rodenberg

ST. LOUIS – Light plus Sight plus Sound equal Action. Of that, Bryan Laughlin, executive director at Selkirk Auction is confident for the upcoming Aug. 15 gallery sale.

Two hundred and twenty-two lots will come through the auction block at the sale, titled Light/Sight/Sound, where this powerhouse Midwestern auction house is expected to dazzle all the human senses with brilliance.

Many lots have been consigned from the estate of Lou Phillips, owner of Phillips Antiques, a longtime fixture on Broadway Street in St. Louis.

"Selkirk has historically used their gallery auctions as a brand in itself," Laughlin said. "We're using the Light/Sight/Sound phonetics to better identify our market and make it easier for our customers to distinguish among the categories for sale."

Laughlin said the company has enhanced its descriptions in online and printed catalogs, as an aid for bidders. "We lay out all the facts," he said. "That makes it easier for the market to decide. It's a little more time-consuming and laborious, but regardless of what I think, the market is the thing."

The auction will be open for floor bidders at their gallery at 555 Washington Ave. and available for live online bidding at Invaluable.com and on Selkirk's online platform. Absentee and phone bidding is also available.

Within the "Light" category are many colorful early 20th century lamps and stained glass and reverse painted table lamps that came from Phillips Antiques. A fine selection of jewelry includes a 14K yellow gold wedding ring with a 2.19 emerald-cut diamond estimated to sell for $10,000-$14,000. In addition, a vintage Rolex Oyster Perpetual Datejust chronometer with a quilted champagne face of gold Roman numerals and magnified date, made in

Cyber attack against LiveAuctioneers breached personal data

LiveAuctioneers, a popular online bidding platform, announced last week it was the victim of a cyber attack which may have allowed an unauthorized third party access to personal information from the firm's bidder database.

Users who had accounts with LiveAuctioneers were sent an email on Aug. 4 announcing the attack. The breach happened against one of LiveAuctioneers IT suppliers on June 19 and LiveAuctioneers said they were notified on July 11.

"We take the protection of your information very seriously. Unfortunately, we are writing to inform you about a data security issue affecting your LiveAuctioneers bidder account information. We are deeply sorry for any concern or inconvenience this may have caused, and are working quickly to take the appropriate steps to prevent such incidents in the future. We hope that in time we can regain your trust, which we value above all," according to the email users received.

"The data that has been exposed includes user account information like names, email addresses, mailing addresses, phone numbers, visit history, and encrypted passwords (the unauthorized party however managed to decrypt passwords after the cyber attack). Not all of this information may have been present on your bidder account. Please also know that complete payment card numbers were not accessed, and we have no reason to believe auction history was affected.

"The exposure of your LiveAuctioneers credentials (i.e. login and password) could affect other online accounts you may have (if they use the same or similar credentials). You could also be exposed to impersonation and phishing attempts."

LiveAuctioneers blocked unauthorized access to bidder account information upon learning of the attack and disabled user passwords. Users who try to log in get a message about the attack and a link to a website to learn more. Users are then prompted to create a new password.

LiveAuctioeners encourages users to change any passwords for other accounts that used a similar or the same information as what was stored on LiveAuctioneers. It is always a good idea to regularly review all online accounts for suspicious activity.

Police investigating sale of counterfeit 1879 $4 gold coin

TEMECULA, Calif. — Acting on a tip from the Anti-Counterfeiting Educational Foundation federal and local California law enforcement agents are investigating the attempted sale of $400,000 in counterfeit antique coins including a fake example a rare gold coin that brought $300,000 at auction last year. The seller also is a suspect in an earlier case in Minnesota involving fakes, according to Doug Davis, Director of the ACEF Anti-Counterfeiting Task Force (ACTF).

Davis, a former Texas Police Chief, has alerted the U.S. Treasury Department Office of Inspector General (OIG) and is assisting investigators in this case.

"The seller of these counterfeits is on our radar and we're after him no matter how long it takes. In the meantime, these latest fakes are off the market. They were turned over as evidence and are now in the custody of detectives at the Irvine, Calif., Police Department," Davis stated.

The counterfeit $300,000 coin is a replica of an 1879-dated U.S. $4 denomination "Coiled Hair" design gold coin known as a "Stella," of which only about a dozen genuine examples are known.

That coin and three other fakes were housed in counterfeit encapsulation holders that resemble those issued by Numismatic Guaranty Corporation (NGC), a respected rare coin authentication and grading company.

"We were alerted to this case by Ryan Moretti of Orange County California who is the senior numismatist of Colorado-based American Rarities. He was contacted by an individual offering to sell several expensive coins allegedly certified by NGC," said Davis.

When he received the coins, Moretti suspected they and the holders were counterfeit. The suspicions were confirmed after inspection by other numismatic experts including NGC representatives.

"When we entered the suspect's name into our crime and intelligence database it linked him to another case in which he reportedly attempted to sell counterfeit coins to a Minnesota dealer in December 2019. Those coins were seized and a joint investigation is currently continuing by the U.S. Treasury OIG and the Minnesota Department of Commerce," explained Davis.

Federal and local investigators are reviewing both the Minnesota and California cases to determine appropriate jurisdiction to initiate prosecution against the suspect for possession and distribution of counterfeits with the intent to defraud.

"Well-made fakes are flooding the U.S. If you don't know antique coins or precious metal bullion coins, you'd better know a reputable seller, such as experts affiliated with the Professional Numismatists Guild (www.PNGdealers.org) and its Accredited Precious Metals Dealer program (www.APMDdealers.org)," advised Davis.

The ACEF and the task force are supported entirely by donations. The ACEF is a 501(c)(3) corporation and all donations to ACEF are tax deductible.

Above: If it was real, this coin would be worth about $300,000. Instead this is a replica of an 1879-dated U.S. $4 denomination "Coiled Hair" design gold coin known as a "Stella," of which only about a dozen genuine examples are known.

coming. The top lot of this two-day event was the offering a set of 14 French iron armchairs having woven backs and seats. Circa 1970, this set was bid to $8,500 against an estimate of $1,000-$1,500.

Container gardening takes on a whole new meaning if the plants get to reside in a French carved stone planter like the circa 1900 example done in the Renaissance style offered by Kamelot. At 31 inches in diameter and 13 inches high, this planter commanded $5,000.

Need some guardians for the garden? Kamelot offered up a pair of opposing recumbent bronze garden lions with detailed manes and very expressive faces. The 29 inch high, 46 inch wide and 24 inch deep duo roared to a final bid of $3,800.

If having lions in your garden wasn't impressive enough, why not set up a pair of large, opulent cast and wrought iron doors with a transom? The circa 1920 set featured glass inserts and baskets of flowers and sold for $4,200. Each door stood 88 ½ inches high.

Then, to finish off the look, how about a set of four iron columns of ionic form; each 85 inches high, which sold together also for $4,200.

Due to Philadelphia's stay-at-home order when the auction took place, there was no in-person preview, but that surely did not deter buyers. Safe bidding was available via phone and absentee as well as online using LiveAuctioneers and Invaluable. And again adhering to proper social distancing, Kamelot Auctions providing free storage of items purchased until the stay-at-home order is lifted.

Though this 15th edition of Kamelot Auction's Garden Sale was held during unsure times, one thing was evident, buyers are willing to adjust how business takes place in order to become the new owners of fabulous items for their gardens and homes.

A can of spray paint and suddenly a new lease on life

Vintage Style

By Barbara Beem

I heard about Jenna and her DIY passion on the weekly radio program, "What's It Worth?" As it happened, I first caught up with the program's host, Jenna's Dad, aka Mike Ivankovich, a few years back while writing a story about Wallace Nutting for AntiqueWeek. Jenna the Millennial, as her Dad calls her on-air, is a frequent guest, offering a fresh point of view on the world of antiques and collectibles. Her passion for spray painting piqued my interest, and so I decided to chat with her and find out what was behind this artistic pursuit.

Not surprisingly, Jenna grew up in a house full of antiques. "Everything we had was an antique," she told me. And like many members of her generation, "brown" furniture is "totally not my style at all." But she did inherit the "hunting and gathering" gene and is quite comfortable hanging out at flea markets and yard sales and the like. Along with that is her good eye for cool old things and an ability to visualize a creative project.

Her discovery of spray paint has "totally changed my outlook," she continued. Looking to inject a bit of personality into her own nest, Jenna seeks out old wooden furniture that could be given a new lease on life if painted a bright color (preferably not brown!). The pieces she selects for a re-do are not museum quality. Many times, they are not in the best of condition, and, in fact, might be ready to be junked. That they are made of wood, not particle board, makes them worth saving.

Jenna recently worked her magic on a 100-year-old dresser that had been in the family for three generations. Because it was not in the best of conditions, she filled the cracks the best she could, did a bit of sanding, and transformed the medium brown piece into an eye-popping lemon yellow. Once used in a bedroom, it now provides extra storage in her kitchen.

Probably Jenna's favorite piece is one she calls the "naked lady table," an end table that features the carved figure of a scantily-clad Greek goddess (she rates it "PG-13"). This piece was a bit challenging because of all the nooks and crannies, she noted. And then there's the gold-painted whale what-not that sits on a shelf. "Older pieces are more unique."

"I always have spray paint on hand," Jenna continued. She has literally not bought into the whole chalk paint craze, instead making her purchases (usually Krylon) at craft stores. Matte, satin, glossy? Jenna has no preference when it comes to the finish ("it depends on the piece"). She likes paints that include the primer as well as the color, but she isn't averse to recoating until she gets the effect she wants. Flaws, which don't bother her, are more apparent with light-colored paints. If she doesn't like the way something turns out, she simply repaints it.

Talking about when painting old furniture came into vogue, Jenna mentioned the 1990s shabby chic trend of giving everything a coat of white paint. That segued into "farmhouse" chic, made popular by televised decorating shows. But because I'm somewhat older than she, I can remember my Mom "antiquing" pieces of furniture back in the 1970s, first applying a colored paint (often avocado green) and then sealing it with a glaze to produce a grained effect. For her part, my Mom remembers, back in the 1930s, her mother repainting a kitchen chair anytime she had some leftover paint. It's nothing new.

Clearly Jenna has fun expressing herself, and her hobby (she hasn't sold anything "yet" because "I fall in love with the pieces I make") had an unexpected advantage while under recent stay-at-home orders. Her husband had no trouble finding her in their house: He would just follow his nose to the garage, and there she was, spray painting.

Above: Painting furniture is nothing new, as seen in this decorating book from 1971. Today, Jenna Throne achieves a fun mid-century look by adding a splash of color to accent pieces.

Below: This cabinet was "antiqued" in the 1970s, a process that involved applying color and then a sealing glaze to simulate wood grain. Perhaps because it is not avocado green it still works fine as a tv stand.

Below: Before and after: A 100-year-old dresser still functions, thanks to several coats of spray paint.

Going to work with a Disney lunch pail in tow can be fun

By Larry LeMasters

The earliest known lunch pails were wooden or tin buckets with no lids. A folded cloth sat on the open top of these lunch pails to keep out dirt and flies. School children and factory workers carried these open lunch pails each day, and the most common lunch found in these old lunch pails was a crust of bread and chunk of cheese.

The Industrial Revolution changed the face, or the top, of lunch pails. The first manufactured covered tins were lightweight, made of metal, bore colorful advertising, had a lid, and were filled with tobacco and candy. When the tobacco and candy were gone and the pail had been rinsed out, it was put to use as a lunch pail.

Many of these mid-1800s candy tins/lunch pails survive in antique stores and at auction houses, but most are in poor condition with dents and rust. Collectors continually search for the earliest metal pails, made specifically as lunch pails, but modern reproductions have greatly damaged this fun collecting field.

By the mid- to late-1800s, true metal lunch pails evolved, offering school children, factory workers, and, especially, miners a safe and multi-chambered lunch pail, often with lift-out trays. One highly sought after category of 19th century lunch pails is the miner's lunch pail that was large and sported a removable canteen (that rested in the upper section of the pail above the food) that held soup or coffee. The earliest of these miner lunch pails were made in England and were called Cornish pasties or simply pasties in America. The food of choice for a Cornish pasty lunch tin was crusted meat pie with diced beef, onion, and potato. These meat pies could be hand held which eliminated the need for silverware.

By the 20th century, small, enameled lunch pails, called gamelles, flooded the markets in France and Scandinavia, slowly moving across Europe and the Atlantic Ocean to America. Gamelles were designed to carry warm soup in the top and crackers, meat pâté, and fruit in the bottom. Gamelles were constructed of metal graniteware and had matching lids that latched firmly into place. Collectors enjoy displaying gamelles since they were manufactured in a variety of colors, including yellow, blue, green, tan, and red, all of which make for colorful kitchen displays.

Around 1760, John Mantagu, the Earl of Sandwich, coined the term "sandwich" to describe a "piece of salt beef held between two slices of bread." Sandwiches became the rage of England, causing bakers to sell pre-sliced bread for the first time.

Sandwiches also influenced the evolution of the lunch pail. Manufacturers began producing "flatter" lunch kits that began looking like the 20th century lunch pail or lunch box we are all familiar with. And as lunch kits became popular, Americans wanted "fun" lunch kits, so nature scenes, animals, places, and advertisement began showing up on lunch box kits. Finally, in 1935, the first lunch box featuring the lithograph image of a popular cartoon character, Mickey Mouse, was issued. This 1935 Mickey Mouse lunch pail is still one of the most popular and expensive lunch boxes to collect since it holds a special place in lunch box history. A kit in "good condition" is valued at around $2,000. At the same time that Mickey appeared on lunch boxes, so did other Walt Disney "Silly Symphony" cartoon characters.

Another rare and highly sought after lunch box is the Mickey Mouse Lunch Kit, circa 1930s, made by Geuder, Paeschke & Frey Company. The wrap-around scene on the sides of this pail features Mickey Mouse, Minnie Mouse, Horace, Clarabelle, Clara Cluck, Goofy, Pluto and Donald Duck. The top lid is removable, and there is a separate inner tray that is nearly always missing. This lunch pail has two metal handles that wrap over the lid and that are used to carry the lunch box. "Handy Company" and a patent number are embossed on the bottom of this lunch pail. In good condition, collectors pay around $500 for this highly desired lunch pail.

Other metal Disney lunch boxes followed in the 1930s, '40s, and '50s. And all of them are quite expensive to buy today.

In 1954 Adco Liberty produced a Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck metal lunch box set with matching thermos bottle that featured Mickey and Donald picnicking with Donald's nephews—Louie, Huey, and Dewy. Today, one of these lunch boxes without a thermos will cost a collector between $900 and $1,000, and a lunch box with a steel thermos bottle will easily cost twice that amount. Adco Disney lunch box sets are considered extremely rare and are jewels in lunch box collections.

Above: Rare, 1954 Mickey and Donald lunchbox in rough but restorable condition. This box was made by Adco Liberty Company and is valued at $115.

Disney metal lunch pails remain highly collectible today, but like all collectible lunch pails, buyers, especially novice buyers, need to beware. First, and foremost, watch out for reproductions. Many of the classic lunch boxes of the 1950s remained popular, so they are still produced today. One example of a replicated Disney lunch box is the Disney School Bus, which has been made and re-made for years. Buying Disney lunch boxes from reputable dealers is a good way to make sure you are buying an authentic, antique Disney lunch box.

Prices for vintage Disney lunch boxes fluctuate quite a bit, especially in COVID-19 times. For a metal, vintage Disney lunch box, you should expect to pay $400 or more for one in good condition. If you can find a mint condition, 1930s Disney lunch box, expect to pay $1,000 or more.

Selkirk

Switzerland in March 1989, will be offered with its original green leather watch case, manual and Rolex box.

Among the many fine art pieces is a signed Henri Hecht Maik (French, 1922-1993) oil on canvas painting titled Les Jeunes, dated 1980. On the reverse of the frame is a label bearing Wally Findlay Galleries. "Maik is becoming very popular in the current art market," Laughlin said.

Also coming from the private collection of Lou Phillips is a large (55-inch in height and 38 inches wide) canvas painting titled Sir Fallstaff Beer by Haddon (Sunny) Hubbard Sundblom (American, 1899-1976). In the painting, Sir Fallstaff, attired in Bavarian garb, is hoisting a mug of beer, as an advertising illustration for Lemp Brewery. Sundblom is a legendary illustrator and father of modern-day branding legends including Santa for Coca-Cola, The Quaker Oats man, and the recently retired Aunt Jemima character.

Another spectacular lot from Phillips is a late 19th century ceramic tile fireplace "in the manner of Herman Carl Mueller." The decorative encaustic tile fireplace is surrounded by Neoclassical composition of attractive figures and birds among blossoming branches. "This is an extremely rare item," Laughlin said. "Usually you see single tiles selling for good money. But to have the entire fireplace, that is rarely seen."

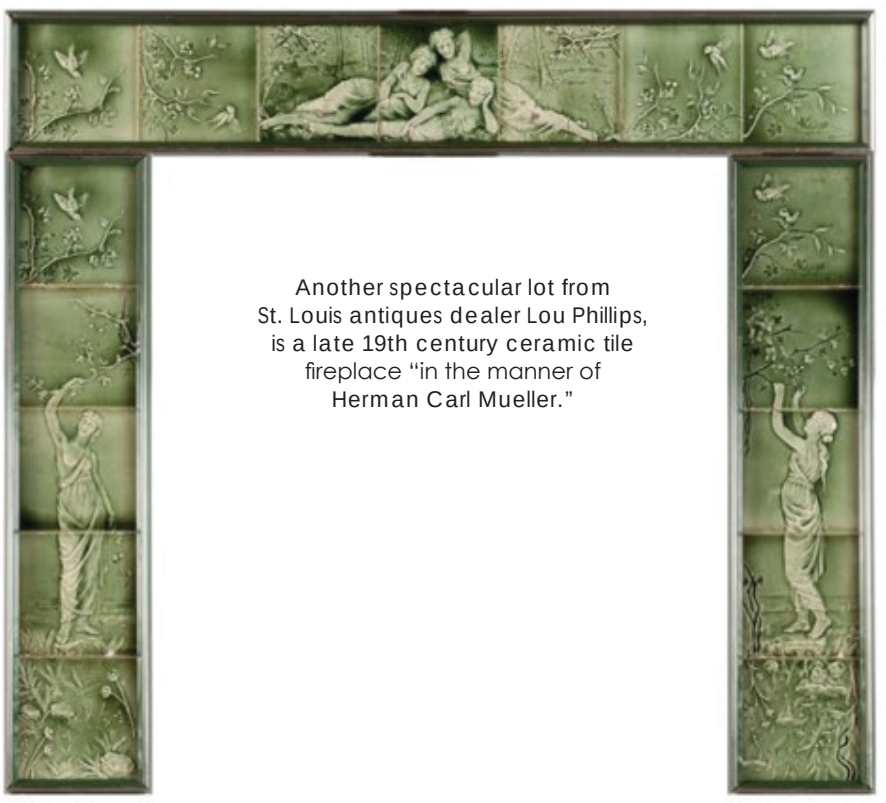
Above: Sir Fallstaff Beer by Haddon (Sunny) Hubbard Sundblom (American, 1899-1976). Exuberantly hoists a mug of beer, as an advertising illustration for Lemp Brewery.

Below: One of the sweetest lot from the "Sounds" category is an antique cylinder music box, Swiss-made in the late 19th century, plays 10 tunes with zither damper. The original lithograph mounted to the lid is penned with the 10 song titles.



Another spectacular lot from St. Louis antiques dealer Lou Phillips, is a late 19th century ceramic tile fireplace "in the manner of Herman Carl Mueller."

Cornishware

cheap knockoffs) to a company by the name of Mason and Cash in 2001. The financial crash of 2007 shuttered the doors of the factory seemingly for good but it was resurrected by long-time collectors and enthusiasts Charles Rickards and Paul Burston. The Cornishware line is now manufactured in Somerset with new products being added along with new versions of the old stock.

Given that these wares were used frequently in the kitchen it is not uncommon to see chips, nicks, cracks and wear to the lettering or, depending on what the contents of the storage jar held, staining to the inside which may or may not come out with a good soak. Lids on storage jars, like lids on old teapots, oftentimes are damaged or missing. Collectors need to make certain that lids fit correctly and if not the lid is most likely a replacement which decreases its value. As with all collectibles purchasing the best items in the best condition, keeping in mind your pocketbook, is always sage advice.

For more information on Cornishware check out www.gresley-pottery.uk. The site, maintained and updated by Dr. Ian M. Hambling, historian and archivist for the T. G. Green Archive Collection located in Church Gresley, Derbyshire, and himself a world-renowned collector having amassed a private collection of over 2,000 pieces, it provides useful information for beginning and advanced collectors.

Please report late delivery

AntiqueWeek strives to provide customers with the best delivery possible. Occasionally, areas of the country do not receive timely delivery of the paper. The goal of AntiqueWeek's late delivery staff is to work with the USPS to get your paper to you – on time, every time. If your paper is not delivered on or before the issue date, please let us know.

These areas experienced late delivery reports during the week of July 21, 2020:

These areas experienced multiple reports of late deliveries: Indiana and Ohio
These states reported single reports of late delivery: South Carolina

Due to the high volume of calls we receive on a weekly basis, we are publishing some phone numbers for the USPS. We encourage you to call them and let them know how their recent changes have impacted your delivery. Debra Benn: (317) 870-8244, Tracey Murphy: (317) 870-8238, Deborah Samuels: (317) 870-8245, Lynn Seymour: (317) 870-8263

Our staff members will continue to address the late delivery reports we receive. We are constantly striving to rectify the late delivery problem. Please call our customer care center at (800) 876-5133 or email subscriptions@antiqueweek.com to report late delivery. Continue to report delivery issues if problems are not fixed after the first call so staff members can continue to report these difficulties to the USPS.

In order to ensure everyone can see the paper on time, AntiqueWeek uploads each issue every Saturday morning to its website. The online issue is free to subscribers and totally keyword searchable. Visit www.antiqueweek.com.
